INTRODUCTION.

For remarks upon Grammatical Forms occurring in Chaucer, I must beg leave to refer the reader to the Introduction to Dr. Morris's edition of the Prologue, Knight's Tale, &c.; and to some further remarks in the Introduction to my edition of the Prioresses Tale, &c. (Clarendon Press Series), p. xlix.

Remarks upon the Metre and Versification will be found in the Introduction to the Prioresses Tale, p. liii.; followed by a Metrical Analysis of Part I. of the Squire's Tale, p. lxvi.

An account of the manner in which the text of the present edition has been formed will be found in the same volume, p. lxxiii. It may suffice to repeat here that the text follows, in general, the readings of the Ellesmere MS. (called 'E.' in the footnotes), with occasional variations from six others, viz. the Hengwrt, Cambridge, Corpus, Petworth, Lansdowne, and Harleian MSS., denoted respectively by the symbols Hn., C., Cp., Pt., Ln., and Hl. Of these, all but the Harleian Ms. are printed in full in Mr. Furnivall's splendid Six-text Edition, published for the Chaucer Society; whilst MS. Hl. is substantially the same as the text in Wright's, Morris's and Bell's editions. The text of Tyrwhitt's edition comes near to that of the Ellesmere MS., and does not much differ from that in the present volume. As in 'The Prioresses Tale,' &c., the Grouping of the Tales and the numbering of the lines exactly correspond with those of the Six-text edition, for the purpose of convenience of reference. The Tales here chosen belong partly to Group B (see Introd. to Prior. Tale, p. xii.); partly to Group C; and partly to Groups G, H, and I. Group G, containing the Second Nun's Tale and the Canon's Yeoman's Tale, is printed here in full.
In my former Introduction, I endeavoured to explain all that seemed necessary for a right understanding of the text. But I have been reminded that I gave no explanation of the titles of the various parts of the Groups, such as 'Man-of-Law Head-link,' and the rest; and I have been asked to explain what a 'Head-link' means. The answer is, that all these titles are copied exactly, for convenience, from Mr. Furnivall's Six-text edition, and that they were adopted by him, in the first instance, in order to show the exact condition in which the Canterbury Tales have come down to us in the existing MSS. Thus, before the Man of Law's Tale, we find, in reality, two introductory passages. The latter of these is the real Prologue, ll. 99-133. But it was necessary to find another name for the preliminary dialogue in ll. 1-98. The name fixed upon by Mr. Furnivall was a 'Link,' a term adopted in order so to name these connecting dialogues as to indicate the connection between the Tales. Thus the dialogue or Link connecting the Clerk's Tale with the Merchant's Tale (Group E, ll. 1213-1244, in Prioresses Tale, &c. pp. 100, 101) came to be called the 'Clerk-Merchant Link;' and so in other cases. Hereupon there arose, however, a new difficulty. The Tales are left in an imperfect state, in unconnected groups, and there is nothing to show what Tale was intended to precede that told by the Man of Law. The result is, that the passage now under discussion, i.e. the first 98 lines of Group B, turns out to be a 'Blank-Man of Law Link.' To avoid this awkward expression, Mr. Furnivall determined to call it the 'Man-of-Law Head-link,' that is to say, a passage preceding the Man of Law's Prologue, without anything to join it on to anything else. The same explanation makes clear the meaning of The Squire Head-link, Group F, ll. 1-8, a passage only eight lines long. Similarly, at the end of the Man of Law's Tale, there is a passage (Group B, ll. 1163-1190) which has a double title; viz. Man-of-Law End-link, or Shipman's Prologue. Now for this double title there is a special reason. No doubt the passage is, properly, the Shipman's Prologue, as it is rightly called in MS. Arch. Seld. B. 14. But it is convenient to have the alternative title, because in some
MSS. it is wrongly called the Prologue of the Squire’s Tale. The title Man-of-Law End-link expresses, therefore, that it is, in any case, a pendant or tag to the Man of Law’s Tale, and that it must certainly follow that Tale, whatever other Tale it is to precede. These titles are, then, mere explanatory phrases, and are in all cases copied exactly from the Chaucer Society’s Six-text edition. It is easy, by merely observing the names of these ‘links,’ to understand and to remember the exact extent to which the Tales were partially arranged by their author.

Pronunciation.

There is yet one other matter on which I have been asked to say somewhat, viz. the Pronunciation of Chaucer’s English. This matter I purposely left untouched until students should have become somewhat more familiar with the nature of the Metre and Versification, so far as that can be understood by using the modern pronunciation only. It is now, perhaps, high time to insisit on the importance of making some attempt towards understanding, if only in a rough and approximate manner, the great changes that have occurred in our pronunciation since Chaucer’s days, so that the beauty of his rhythm may not be marred by the application to it of that system of English pronunciation which is in use at the present day; a system which might be applied to the reading of Dante or Boccaccio with the same fitness as to Chaucer, and with a very similar result as regards an approximation to the sounds with which the author was himself familiar.

On the subject of Pronunciation, my guide is, as a matter of course, Mr. Alexander J. Ellis, whose standard work on Early English Pronunciation ¹ is well-known, at any rate by name, to all

¹ On Early English Pronunciation, with especial reference to Shakspere and Chaucer. By Alexander J. Ellis, F.R.S., F.S.A., London, Trübner and Co. Parts I and II are dated 1869; Part III is dated 1870; Part IV is dated 1874, extending to p. 1432. The work will be completed in two more parts. who have taken any interest in the matter. Mr. Ellis has treated the question so carefully and fully that an attempt on my part at giving a general notion of his results would be hardly fair to him or satisfactory to the reader; but he has, fortunately, himself drawn up a brief abstract of his results, which was printed as Appendix A (pp. 253*-264*) in the second issue of the Aldine edition of Chaucer, edited by Dr. Morris. It is here reprinted by permission of the publishers, after revision by Mr. Ellis, for the present work.

I also draw attention to Mr. Sweet's book on English Sounds, with its full Word-lists and abundance of examples\(^1\). The results there arrived at sufficiently agree with Mr. Ellis's, and fully confirm them in all that is material.

The pronunciation of English during the fourteenth century differed materially from that now in use. The following is an abstract of the conclusions at which Mr. Ellis has arrived respecting the pronunciation probably in use among the highly educated southern speakers for whom Chaucer wrote, and directions are subjoined for modern readers who wish to imitate it.

A long = \( ah \), as in father, alms, are; the usual continental sound of long \( a \). The present pronunciation of \( a \), as \( ai \) in wait, seems not to have become thoroughly established till the beginning of the eighteenth century.

A short = \( \ddot{a}h \), the short sound of \( ah \), not now used in received English, but still common in the midland and northern provinces;
the usual continental sound of short \( a \). The present very different pronunciation, as \( a \) in cat, agreeing with the sound in the south-western and eastern counties, was not established till the seventeenth century; those, however, to whom \( \ddot{a}h \) is difficult may use this \( a \) in cat.

AA, the same as A long.

\(^1\) A History of English Sounds, from the earliest period, with full Word-published for the London Philological Society and the English Dialect Society in 1874.)
AI = ab'ee, a diphthong consisting of ab pronounced briefly but with a stress, and gliding on to ee in one syllable; sometimes used now in aye, and in the second syllable of Isaiah, as distinct from the first; the German sound of ai, nearly the Italian abi and the French aï. Those who have a difficulty with this sound may use the ordinary pronoun I. The modern sound ai, as in wait, was not thoroughly established till the seventeenth century, although it began to make its appearance in the first half of the sixteenth. Almost all dialects treat this combination differently from long A. See EY.

AU = ab'oo, a diphthong consisting of ab pronounced briefly but with a stress, and gliding on to oo in one syllable: not used in modern English; the German au, nearly the Italian au in Laura, the French aou. Those who have a difficulty with this sound may use the ordinary ou in house. The modern sound of au, as in Paul, was not established till the seventeenth century.

AW, the same as AU.
AY, the same as AI.
B, as at present.

C = k before a, o, u, or any consonant, and = s before e, i, y. It was never called sh, as in the present sound of vicious, which then formed three syllables, vi-ci-ous.

CCH = tch, as in fetch.
CH = cb, as in such, cheese, and in Greek words occasionally k, as at present.

D, as at present.

E long = ē in there, ai in pair, a in dare; that is, as ai is now pronounced before r, or rather more broadly than before any other consonant, and without any tendency to taper into the sound of ee; the German eb long, nearly the French è, and Italian open e. Those who find this sound too difficult may say ai as in ail. The present use of the sound of ee in eel was not established till the beginning of the eighteenth century, although two sounds of e as in mere, there, were partially marked by ee and ea in the latter part of the sixteenth century, and ea very gradually changed to the sound of ee in the seventeenth. It is possible that a close and open sound of this letter, as in the Italian e chiuso and e aperto (which are allowed to rhyme), or the French é and è (which are not allowed to rhyme), may have existed, but as they were allowed to rhyme in Chaucer, they cannot be separated with certainty. Dickens’s Sai-rey Gamp has the close sound, the usual Sarah has the open sound.

E short = e in met, pen, well.

E final = ē, or short  e lightly and obscurely pronounced, as the final e in the German einē herrlichē gutē Gabē; nearly like the present a in idea or final er when the r is not trilled. This sound was always used in prose, when the final e was the mark of some final vowel in older forms of the language, when it marked oblique cases, feminine genders, plurals, inflections of verbs, adverbs, &c. But in poetry it was regularly elided altogether before a following vowel, and before he, his, him, hire=her, here=their, bem=them, and occasionally before bath, hadde, have, bow, her, here=here. It was never pronounced in hire=her, here=their, our=our, youre=your; and was frequently omitted in hadde=had, were, time, more. It was occasionally, but rarely, omitted when necessary for the rhyme and metre, and for force of expression, in other positions, especially when it replaced an older vowel, or marked an oblique case, precisely as in modern German. As this pronunciation of the final e gradually fell out of use during the fifteenth century, when most of the MSS. of Chaucer now in existence were written, the final e is often incorrectly inserted and omitted in their orthography, and has to be omitted or restored from metric and other considerations. Practically the reader should always insert it when necessary for the metre, and never pronounce it as our final y, but always as above indicated.

EA, the same as long E, like ea in break, great, to wear, to tear, bear; seldom used except in the words ease, please. The modern sound of ea, as ee in eel, was not established till the eighteenth century.

EE, the same as long E, that is, as e'e in e'er; in frequent use. The combination ee, with its modern sound of ee, was not established till past the middle of the sixteenth century.
EI, the same as AI, with which it was constantly interchanged by the scribes, that is, nearly as the present pronoun I. The modern sound as ee belongs to the eighteenth century. See EY.

EO, the same as long E; seldom used except in the word peopel, often spelled pepel. The modern sound of eo as ee, dates from the sixteenth century.

ES final, the mark of the plural, was generally pronounced as es or is, even in those cases where the e is now omitted.

EU. There is much difficulty in arriving at a satisfactory conclusion respecting this combination, which is not frequent in rhymes. Very possibly it was =ui in the Scotch puir, the long sound of the French u, German ü, in all words of French origin. This became like our modern ew during the seventeenth century, and may be so pronounced by those to whom the French sound is too difficult. In words not of French origin, eu = ai'oo, a diphthong consisting of ai pronounced briefly, but with a stress, and gliding on to oo in one syllable, as in the Italian Europa. Neither sound is now used in received English, but both occur provincially. See EW.

EW, like EU, had possibly the sound of ui in the Scotch puir, or else ai'oo, precisely as EU. The following words, generally written with ew in Chaucer, seem to have the sound of ui, or French u: blue, due, eschew, glue, a mew for hawks, remew, stew, sue. The following, on the other hand, seem to have had the sound of ai'oo: dronkelew, feaw, beaw, hue, knew, new, rew = row, rue, speaw, shrew, threw, true.

EY, the same as AY, with which it is constantly interchanged by the scribe. The modern sound as ee belongs to the eighteenth century. AY, EY were possibly pronounced as e in there during the fifteenth century, in the north and west midland counties, and hence occasionally interchanged with long e in the orthography of some later or northern MSS. Modern dialects treat them as they do ai and not as they do the long e.

F = f, as at present.

G = g hard in all words not of French origin, and = j before e, i, in words of French origin. Sometimes G was j before other vowels in words where the e usually inserted was omitted by the scribe, just as at present in judgment, gaol.

GE final, or before a, o, in French words = j, but the e was sometimes omitted in writing.

GH = kb, the Scotch and German sound of cb, or kb as it is best written, produced by making the contact of the tongue with the soft palate for k so imperfect that a hissing sound can be heard. After e, i, the tongue was probably raised higher, so that kb approached to the sound of a hissed y; and after o, u, the lips were probably often rounded, giving the effect of the modern Scotch qub; the former sound fell into y and short i, the latter into qub and f; or into ob, oo. Gb may be conveniently always spoken like the German and Scotch cb, that is kb, but it will have to be occasionally omitted where written, and pronounced where not written, on account of the negligence of the scribes of the old MSS.¹, and it is very possible that the changes above indicated were already more or less in vogue, and that the poet availed himself of either use according as it suited his rhyme. This guttural is still in full force in Scotland and is even still heard in living use in England from a few old people.

H initial = h, just as at present; but it seems to have been generally omitted in unaccented he, his, him, hire = her, here = their ², hem = them, and often in bath, hadde, haue, just as we still have T've told 'em; and in some French words, as host, honour, honest, &c. it was probably omitted as at present. H final represents a very faint sound of the guttural kb (see GH), into which it dwindled before it became entirely extinguished.

I long was not at all the modern sound of I. It was the lengthened sound of i in still, which was nearly but not quite ee; compare still, steal, in singing 'Still so gently o'er me stealing,' in which also the last syllables of gently and stealing are lengthened with the same vowel. Those who think they find it difficult to lengthen this vowel which, when short, is extremely common

¹ In the present edition these anomalies are avoided as much as possible.
² In the present edition, the hire, here of the MSS. is printed hir, her.
in English, but is not known in French and Italian¹, may say ee, as in mien, mean, but they will be quite wrong if they pronounce it as at present in mine.

I short = \( i \), as in pit, stiff, pin; not as in French or Italian.
Compare English finny, fish, with French fini, fiche.

I consonant = \( j \).

IE, before a consonant in many MSS., but only in French words, was possibly the same as long E, with which it was often interchanged by the scribe. The modern sound of ee dates from the seventeenth century. IE final and unaccented as in berie, merie, must be pronounced as two syllables \( i\-\bar{e} \), the first probably as the short I just described, and the second as the final E already described. But IE final, then more often written YE, has more frequently the accent on the I or Y, and then that letter was pronounced as Chaucer's long I, that is nearly as ee.
Thus melodie (commonly written melodye) had nearly the same sound as it has in modern French songs when sung.

J = \( j \), was not distinguished from I consonant in MSS.

K, as at present.

L, as at present.

LE final, probably as at present in little = lit'\( l \), except when \( \bar{e} \) is inflectional.

LH (which does not occur in this edition) was the same as simple
L. It was scarcely ever used, but in the thirteenth century it was probably a hissed \( l \), not unlike (but not the same as) Welsh ll.

M, as at present.

N, as at present. There is no reason to suppose that it was nasalized in French words as in modern French. An, on, in French words were often written aun, oun, and were probably always sounded as these combinations in Chaucer's orthography, that is as \( ab'\( oon, oon \).

¹ Extensive observation shows that the sound is still very common in English, even where the speaker thinks he says ee as in three; and even Italian singers involuntarily introduce it when trying to sing our ee, their \( i \), on a low note.
NG had probably three values, as at present in sing, singer, linger, change. It is not possible to determine with certainty whether it was generally a simple ng as in singer, or an ng followed by g, as at present in longer, linger, finger, when medial or final, so that the modern custom alone can be followed.

O long was oa in oar, boar, o in more, that is a somewhat broader sound than oa in moan, o in stone, and with no tendency to taper into oo. It is still heard in the provinces, and is like the Italian open o or o aperto; approaching au, but not so broad. Those who find the sound difficult to pronounce may say ob, which was not established till the seventeenth century. It had also the sound of oo, generally in those words where it is still oo, as prove, move, or where it has become u in but, as love, shove. Just as E long and EE gave place to two sounds, written ee and ea in the latter part of the sixteenth century, as in modern peer, pear, so O long and OO gave place to two sounds, written oo and oa in the latter part of the sixteenth century, as in modern boor, boar. It is possible therefore that even as early as the fourteenth century, and perhaps still earlier, these changes were prepared by a division of both sounds into close (as in Italian fede, sete, avere, vendè, credeva, &c.; ombra, ondo, amore, amoroso, &c.) and open (as in Italian regola, predica, cedo, &c.; buono, uomo, oro, poco, &c.), nearly modern ail, air, mole, more, supposing ail, mole, not to have tapering vowels. Mr. Sweet has endeavoured to make these distinctions in his 'History of English Sounds,' but there is no evidence from rhymes, and dialectal investigations (as yet very incomplete) have so far failed to confirm the conclusion.

O short was ãa, the short sound of the last, the regular sound of short o on the continent, very common in the provinces, but not so broad as the modern o in got, which was not established till the seventeenth century, but may be used for ãa by those who find the proper sound too difficult. In a few words short O had also occasionally the sound of short ã in bull, push, put; where it replaced Anglo-Saxon u, and was pronounced ã in the sixteenth century. These cases correspond almost precisely to those in which it is now pronounced as u in but, as sonne, wonder.
PRONUNCIATION.

OA does not seem to have been used in Chaucer. It was introduced for long o in the sixteenth century.

OE is very rarely used, chiefly in poepel for people and in reproeve for repreve, to show the change of sound. It was the same as long E.

OI was perhaps generally oo'ee, a diphthong consisting of the sound of oo pronounced briefly, but with a stress, gliding on to ee in one syllable, as sailors pronounce buoy, almost as in wooing, or Italian lui, and very like French oui, as distinct from oui. It may have occasionally had the sound of Chaucer’s o short (open o, nearly o in got) followed by ee, nearly as modern joy.

OO, the same as long O, with which it is constantly interchanged. The modern sound of oo in pool dates from after the middle of the sixteenth century.

OU had three sounds: properly it was = modern oo long, as in loud, bous, called lood, boon; occasionally it was used for ù in bull, as in out [us], outer; and sometimes for the diphthong oð'oo, that is, the sound of long O gliding into modern oo, almost the same as in modern soul, except that the first sound was broader. The three cases may be distinguished pretty accurately thus:—OU was oo, where it is now pronounced as in loud; OU was ù, where it is now pronounced as in double; OU was oð'oo where it is now occasionally pronounced oh'oo as in soul.

OUGH must be considered as OU followed by GH. In drought it was drōökbt, in plough it was plookb; in fought, bought, where it has now the sound of au, it was probably òd'oo-kh, or nearly our modern tapering ob followed by kh; but, if the reader feels any difficulty, he may use the modern oð in oð in cow followed by the guttural kh, as fowkbt. Many modern dialects treat ought in this way.

OW was the same as OU, but was more commonly used when final.

OY was the same as OI.

P, as at present.

PH = f, as at present.

QU, as at present.
R as r in ring, berring, carry; always trilled, never as now in car, serf, third, cord. Hence it did not lengthen or alter the preceding vowel, so that her in herd must have the r as well trilled as in berring, nearly the same as now in Scotland and Ireland, but possibly not so strongly, when not preceding a vowel.

RE final, probably the same as ER, except when ë was inflectional.

RH, where it is found in MSS. of the period (it is not in this edition), was probably r as now, but a truly hissed rh occurs in some dialects.

S was more frequently a sharp s when final, than at present; thus wys, was, is, all had s sharp. But between two vowels, and when the final es had the e omitted after long vowels or voiced consonants, it was probably z, a letter which sometimes interchanged with s, but was rarely used. S was never sh or zh as at present, thus vision had three syllables, as vi-si-oon.

SCH was sh, as in shall.

SH sometimes used for SCH and pronounced as at present.

SSH, used occasionally for double SCH when the sound of sh followed a short vowel.

T, as at present, but final -tion was in two syllables, -si-oon.

TH had two sounds, as in thin, then, and there is no means of telling whether these sounds were distributed differently from what they now are, except that with probably rhymed to smith. They can therefore be pronounced as at present.

U long only occurred in French words, and probably always had the sound of Scotch ui in pur, or French u, German ü, a sound which remained nearly to the eighteenth century. Those who find this sound too difficult, may pronounce as the present long English u in tune, which was not considered to be the normal sound till the seventeenth century.

U short was generally short ù, as in bull, pull, the modern sound of u in but not having been established till the seventeenth century. Occasionally, however, it was used for short i or short e, precisely as in the modern busy, bury; these cases can generally be distinguished by seeing that they would be now so pro-
Pronunciation. Possibly the \( u \) then represented an ancient sound of short French \( u \).

\( U \) consonant = \( v \). In the MSS. \( u \) and \( v \) are confused as vowel or consonant, and \( u \) vowel initial is commonly written \( v \).

\( V \) vowel, the same as \( U \).

\( V \) consonant, the same as at present.

\( W \) vowel, used in diphthongs as a substitute for \( U \), and sometimes used absolutely for \( oo \), as \( wde = oo\ddot{e} \), \( herberw = herberoo \).

\( W \) consonant, the same as at present.

\( WH \), a blowing through the lips when in the position for \( w \), something like a whistle; still generally pronounced in the north of England, but commonly confused with \( w \) in the south. To foreigners, when initial, it sounds \( h\ddot{o}o \), as in \( whan = h\ddot{o}o\ddot{a}bn \) nearly, but \( wh\ddot{a}bn \) correctly. In Chaucer it often occurs final in place of \( GH \) (which see) when pronounced as the Scotch \( qub \). It was the transition sound of \( GH \) from \( kb \) to the modern \( f \).

\( WR \) was probably pronounced as an \( r \) with rounded lips, which produces the effect of a \( w \) and \( r \) sounded together, as in the French \( roi \). Those who find a difficulty in speaking it thus, may pronounce \( w'r \), with the faintest sound of a vowel between the \( w \) and \( r \), almost \( w\ddot{e}ret'\ddot{e} \) for \( write \), but not making an additional syllable; such sounds are still heard provincially.

\( X \) was \( ks \), as at present.

\( Y \) vowel, long and short, had precisely the same value as \( I \) long and short.

\( Y \) consonant was generally written with the same character as \( GH \), which resembled \( z \) (\( \ddot{z} \)), and may have had that sound of \( GH \) which resembled a hissed \( y \). But probably it had become thoroughly \( y \) in Chaucer's time, and should be so pronounced.

\( Z = z \), as now, and never \( zh \).

The position of the accent was not always the same as at present. French words seem to have been pronounced with equal stress on all the syllables, as at present. Some English terminations, as \(-and\), \(-ing\), \(-ly\), always had a considerable stress, even when a preceding syllable was accented.

If we adopt most of the easy modern English substitutes for the difficult old sounds, as pointed out in the preceding table, but use dh for the flat sound of th in thee, u for u in bull, ui as in Scotch for French u, and ahy, ahw for ab'ee, ab'oo, as described under AI, AW, mark the pronounced final e by 'e, and indicate the accent, when it does not fall on the first syllable only, by ('). we may write the pronunciation of the first lines of the Canterbury Tales as follows. Observe that the first line begins with an accented syllable, without a precedent short syllable, as is not unfrequent in Chaucer.

Whan dhat Ah'preel' with 'is shoorës swohtê
Dhê drooikh of March hath persed toh dhê rohtë,
And bahbdhëd evree vahyn in swich lee'koor'
Of which ver'tui' enjen'dred is dhê floor;
Whan Zefrûs, aik, with 'is waitë braithë
Enspee'red redt in evree holt and haiithë
Dhê tendre kropës, and dhê yungô sùné
Hath in dhê ram 'is halfë koors irûn'ë,

It is proper to add that Mr. Ellis's results were chiefly obtained from a careful examination of the Harleian MS. (Hl.), the spelling of which does not altogether agree with that of the Ellesmere MS., here chiefly followed. The only result in which I do not feel full confidence is that which makes the sound of EY identical with that of AY. I look upon these rather as permissible rimes than as real ones, and should prefer to regard EY and EI as indicating the sound ai'ee, that is, a diphthong consisting of e long (=ɛ in there, or ai in pair) pronounced briefly but with a stress, and gliding on to e. I do not find that they are interchanged by the scribe of the Ellesmere MS. in all cases, though they are so frequently. There are certain words, such as deye, to die, tweye ¹, twain, burgeys, a burgess, eighte, eight, queynute, quaint, receyue, to receive, pleye, to play, &c. which seem to be spelt with ey rather than with ay; and, on the other hand, may be cited daye, a day, paye, to please, arrayed, arrayed, nay, nay, may, may, &c. which seem to be spelt with ay rather than with ey.

I offer this criticism with diffidence, merely saying that I am unable as yet to see how words like A.S. weg, plega, twegen, should have passed in Middle English into way, play, twayn, as pronounced by Mr. Ellis, and have reverted nearly to their original sound in our way, play, and twain. With respect to way (written way, wey), which undoubtedly rimes, or seems to rime, with day, I would suggest that it may have had two pronunciations; as was certainly the case with deye, to die, which is also spelt dye, and made to rime with remedye, a remedy. With regard also to such a word as our modern receive, we can easily understand that it was once pronounced so as to rime with the modern word rave, but the riming of its vowel very nearly with the modern rive is much less clear. On this point, therefore, I should plead that some doubt may be allowed to remain.

I may add here that the long sound of i is generally denoted by y in the Ellesmere MS. Cf. whylom, p. 1, l. 134, with riche in the line following. Our modern \(j\) is commonly written as capital I, as in Judge, B. 688; but the small \(i\) is sometimes used, as in ioye, B. 409. When \(u\) is written between two vowels, it stands for \(v\); as in euery (every), B. 152; deuyse (devyse), B. 154; lyuen (lyven), B. 175. In a few words, \(v\) is written for \(u\), at the beginning; as in vp, use, unto, for up, use, unto.

¹ Not in the Ellesmere MS. only, but in nearly all. Tweye occurs 7 times at the end of a line. In 5 places it is spelt with ey or ei in all the 6 MSS.; in 1 place, in 5 of them; and in the last instance, in 4 of them.
INTRODUCTION.

I now proceed to some general remarks upon the Tales in the present selection.

The Man of Law's Tale. The Introduction to the Man of Law's Prologue (also called, for brevity, the Man-of-Law Head-link) and the Prologue itself, are printed in The Prioresses Tale, &c. (Clarendon Press), pp. i–5. See also the Introduction to that volume, p. xx. The Head-link and Prologue together contain 133 lines, so that the Tale itself begins, in the present volume, with l. 134. I have already stated my belief that The Man of Law's Tale is a piece of Chaucer's earlier workmanship, and that it was revised for insertion among the Tales, with the addition of a Prologue, about 1386. Tyrwhitt has drawn attention to the fact that a story, closely agreeing with The Man of Law's Tale, is found in Gower's Confessio Amantis, Book II. He was misled by the expression "som men wolde sayn" in l. 1009 into supposing that Chaucer took the story from Gower; see note to that line, p. 137. Chronology at once settles the question; for Chaucer's tale, written before 1385, could not have been derived from Gower's, written about 1393. The simple explanation of the matter is, that both our poets drew from a common source. That common source has, fortunately, been discovered, in the Life of Constance, as narrated in the Anglo-Norman Chronicle of Nicholas Trivet, written about A.D. 1334. Mr. Thomas Wright, in his edition of the Canterbury Tales, pointed out Trivet's Chronicle as containing the original of the story as told by Gower. That it also contains the original of the story as told by Chaucer, is evident from the publications of the Chaucer Society. Trivet's version of the story was edited for that Society by Mr. Brock in 1872, with an English translation, and a careful line-by-line analysis of it, shewing clearly the exact extent to which Chaucer followed his original. The name of the publication is 'Originals and Analogues of some of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales,' published for the Chaucer Society; Part I, 1872; Part II, 1875. To this I am indebted for much of the information here given. It appears that Nicholas Trivet was an English Dominican friar, who died some time after 1334. A short account of him in Latin, with a list of works ascribed to him, is to be found in Quetif and Echard's Scriptores Ordinis Praedicatorum, tom. i. pp. 561-565; also a notice in English of his life and some of his works, in the Preface to T. Hog's edition of Trivet's Annales. Mr. Brock notices eighteen of his works, amongst which it will suffice to mention here (a) his Annales ab origine mundi ad Christum (Royal MS. 13 B. xvi, &c.); (b) his Annales sex Regum Angliae, qui a comitibus Andegavensibus [counts of Anjou] originem traxerunt (Arundel MSS. 46 and 220, Harl. MSS. 29 and 4322, &c.); and (c) his Anglo-Norman Chronicle, quite a distinct work from the Latin Annales (MS. Arundel 56, &c.). Of the last there are numerous copies, MS. Arundel 56 being one of the best, and therefore selected to be printed for the Chaucer Society. The heading runs thus:—'Ci comence les Cronicles qe Frere Nichol Trivet escript a dame Marie, la fille moun seignour le Roi Edward, le fitz Henri;' shewing that it was written for the princess Mary, daughter of Edward I, born in 1278, who became a nun at Amesbury in 1285. The story of Constance begins on leaf 45, back. Gower follows Trivet rather closely, with but few omissions, and only one addition of any importance, about 30 lines long. 'Chaucer tells the same story as Trivet, but tells it in his own language, and in much shorter compass. He omits little or nothing of importance, and alters only the details... Chaucer's additions are many; of the 1029 lines of which the Tale consists, about 350 are Chaucer's additions. The passages are these:—ll. 190-203; 270-287; 295-315;

1 I sometimes copy Mr. Brock's very words.
2 The Dominican friars were also called Friars Preachers.

Tyrwhitt pointed out that much the same story is to be found in the Lay of Emarè (MS. Cotton, Calig. A. ii, fol. 69), printed by Ritson in the second volume of his Metrical Romances. He observes:—‘the chief differences are, that Emarè is originally exposed in a boat for refusing to comply with the desires of the Emperor her father; that she is driven on the coast of Galys, or Wales, and married to the King of that country. The contrivances of the step-mother, and the consequences of them, are the same in both stories.’

Mr. Thomas Wright further observes:—‘The treachery of King Æella’s mother enters into the French Romance of the Chevalier au Cigne, and into the still more ancient Anglo-Saxon romance of King Offa, preserved in a Latin form by Matthew Paris. It is also found in the Italian collection, said to have been composed in 1378, under the title of Il Pecorone di ser Giovanni Fiorentino (an imitation of the Decameron), gior. x. no. i. The treason of the Knight who murders Hermengilde is an incident in the French Roman de la Violette, and in the English metrical romance of Le Bone Florence of Rome (printed in Ritson’s collection); and is found in the English Gesta Romanorum, c. 69 (ed. Madden)³, joined, in the latter place, with Constance’s adventure with the steward. It is also found in Vincent of Beauvais², and other writers.’ The tale in the Gesta Romanorum is called ‘Merelaus the Emperor’ (MS. Harl. 7333, leaf 201), and is printed in the Originals and Analogues (Chaucer’s Society), Part I, pp. 57-70. Mr. Furnivall adds—‘This tale was versified by Occleve, who called Merelaus “Gerelaus;” and Warton quotes Occleve’s lines describing how the “feendly man” stabs the Earl’s child, and then puts the bloody knife into the sleeping Empress’s hand—

2 Warton gives the reference, viz. to his Speculum Historiale, lib. vii. c. 90, fol. 86 a.
In the Originals and Analogues, Part i. pp. 71-84, is also printed an extract from Matthew Paris, Vita Offae Primi, ed. Wats, 1684, pp. 965-968, containing the story of 'King Offa's intercepted Letters and banished Queen.'

Some account of Ser Giovanni is given in Dunlop's History of Fiction, 3rd ed. 1845, p. 247. He was a Florentine notary, who began his Tales in 1378, at a village in the neighbourhood of Forli. His work is called Il Pecorone, i.e. the Dunce, 'a title which the author assumed, as some Italian academicians styled themselves Insensati, Stolidi, &c., appellations in which there was not always so much irony as they imagined.' The 1st tale of the 10th Day is thus analysed by Dunlop. 'Story of the Princess Denise of France, who, to avoid a disagreeable marriage with an old German prince, escapes in disguise to England, and is there received in a convent. The king, passing that way, falls in love with and espouses her. Afterwards, while he was engaged in a war in Scotland, his wife brings forth twins; but the queen-mother sends to acquaint her son that his spouse had given birth to two monsters. In place of his majesty's answer, ordering them to be nevertheless brought up with the utmost care, she substitutes a mandate for their destruction, and also for that of the queen. The person to whom the execution of this command is entrusted, allows the queen to depart with her twins to Genoa. At the end of some years she discovers her husband at Rome, on his way to a crusade; she there presents him with his children, and is brought back with them in triumph to England.' Dunlop points out the likeness of this story to those told by Chaucer and Gower, mentions the Lay of Emarè, and adds:—'it is the subject, too, of a very old French romance, published in 4to, without date, entitled Le Roman de la Belle Helene de Constantinople. There, as in Emarè, the heroine escapes to England to avoid a marriage, &c. At length she is ordered to be burnt, but is saved by the Duke of Gloster's niece kindly offering to personate her on that occasion." The story appears again in a collection of tales by Straparola, in the 4th tale of the first night; but Straparola merely borrowed it from Ser Giovanni. See Dunlop, Hist. Fiction, 3rd ed. p. 268.

It occurs to me that Shakespeare, in delineating Imogen, did not forget Chaucer's portrait of Constance.

The Pardoner's Prologue. In this Prologue, the Pardoner is made to expatiate upon the value of his relics. It is very likely that Chaucer here remembered one of the tales in Boccaccio's Decamerone (Day vi. Tale 10), concerning a certain Friar Cipolla, of the Order of St. Anthony, of which Dunlop gives some account in his History of Fiction, 3rd ed. pp. 227, 228. He gave a long account (says Dunlop) of his travels as far as India, and told how on his return he had visited the Patriarch of Jerusalem, who had shewn him innumerable relics: among others, a lock of the hair of the seraph that appeared to St. Francis, a paring of the cherub's nail, a few of the rays of the blessed star that guided the Magi in the east, the jawbone of Lazarus,' &c. He adds—'This tale of Boccaccio drew down the censure of the Council of Trent, and is the one which gave the greatest umbrage to the church. The author has been defended by his commentators, on the ground that he did not intend to censure the respectable orders of friars, but to expose those wandering mendicants who supported themselves by imposing on the credulity of the people; that he did not mean to ridicule the sacred relics of the church, but those which were believed so in consequence of the fraud and artifice of monks.' But it must have been hard to draw this line. In the note to l. 349, p. 145, I have drawn attention to Heywood's close plagiarism from Chaucer, in the passage from The Four P.'s, printed in the note to l. 701 of Dr. Morris's edition of Chaucer's Prologue; also to Sir David Lyndesay's Satyre of the Three Estates, ll. 2037-2121.

The Pardoner's Tale. A considerable part of this Tale is occupied with digressions; the Tale itself is told simply, briefly, and well, occupying ll. 463-484, 661-894. Mr. Thomas Wright remarks—'This beautiful moral story appears to have been taken from a Fabliau, now lost, but of which the mere outline is preserved [as first noted by Tyrwhitt] in the Cento Novelle Antiche, Nov. lxxxii, as well as the story itself by Chaucer.' Dunlop, in his History of Fiction, p. 203, says—'It is evident from the title of the Cento Novelle Antiche, that it was not a new and original production, but a compilation of stories already current in the world. The collection was made towards the end of the 13th century, and was formed from episodes in Romances of chivalry; the Fabliaux of the French Trouveurs; the ancient chronicles of Italy; recent incidents; or jests and repartees current by oral tradition. That the stories derived from these sources were compiled by different authors, is evident from the great variety of style; but who those authors were, is still a problem in the literary annals of Italy.' The story is not exactly the same in all the editions of the Cento Novelle; and two different forms of it have been printed by Mr. Furnivall, in his Originals and Analogues (Chaucer Soc.), Pt. ii. pp. 131-133. Of these, the former is from the edition of 1525, with the title Le Ciento Novelle Antike, where it appears as Nov. lxxxiii. It is very brief, and to this effect. As Christ was walking with his disciples through a wild country, some of His disciples espied some golden piastres, and said, 'Let us take some of these for our use.' But Christ reproved them, warning them that they would soon see the fatal effects of avarice. Soon after, two men found the gold; and one of them went to fetch a mule to carry it off, whilst the other remained to guard it. On his return with the mule, the former offered to his companion two loaves which he had bought for him. The latter refused at the moment, and shortly afterwards took an opportunity of stabbing the other as he chanced to be stooping down. He then took the two loaves, gave one to the mule, and ate the other himself. The loaves were poisoned; and man and mule fell dead. Then our Lord, passing by once more, pointed out to His disciples the three dead bodies.

The other version is from the edition of 1572, entitled Libro di Novelle, et di bel Parlar Gentile; where it is Nov. lxxxii. This is much more like Chaucer's story, and is occasionally quoted in the Notes as the ‘Italian text.’ Mr. Furnivall’s analysis of the story is as follows.

‘A hermit lying down in a cave, sees there much gold. At once he runs away, and meets three robbers. They see no one chasing the hermit, and ask him what he is running away from. “Death, which is chasing me.” “Where is he? shew him us.” “Come with me, and I will.” The hermit takes them to the cave, and shews them Death—the gold. They laugh at him, and make great joy, and say, “The hermit is a fool.” Then the three robbers consult as to what they shall do. The second proposes that one shall go to the town, buy bread and wine and all things needful; but the crafty Devil puts into the heart of the robber who goes to the town, that he shall feed himself, poison his mates, and then have all the treasure, and be the richest man in that country. Meantime, the other robbers plot to murder their mate as soon as he comes back with the bread and wine, and then share the treasure. Their mate returns from the city, and they murder him at once. Then they eat the food he has brought, and both fall dead. Thus doth our Lord God requite traitors. The robbers found death. The wise man fled, and left the gold free.’

As the original is not long, I here reprint it, for the reader’s convenience.

‘Qui conta d’ uno Romito che andando per un luogo foresto trouo molto grande Tesoro.

‘Andando vn giorno vn Romito per vn luogo foresto: si trouò vna grandissima grotta, laquale era molo celata, et rirandosi verso là per riposarsi, pero che era assai affaticato; come e’ giunse alla grotta si la vide in certo luogo molto tralucere, impercio che vi hauea molto oro: e si tosto come il conobbe, incontanente si partio, et comincio a correre per lo deserto, quanto e’ ne potea andare. Correndo cosi questo Romito s’ intoppo in tre grandi scherani, liquali stauano in quella foresta per rubare chi unque vi passaua. Ne gia mai si erano accorti, che questo oro vi fosse. Hor vedendo costoro, che nascosti si stauano, fuggir cosi questo huomo, non hauendo persona dietro che l' cacciasse, alquanto hebbero temenza, ma pur se li pararono dinanzi per sapere perché fuggiuia, che di ciò molto si marauigliauano. Ed elli rispose et disse. "Fratelli miei, io fuggo la morte, che mi vien dietro cacciando mi." Que' non vedendo ne huomo, ne bestia, che il cacciasse, dissero: "Mostraci chi ti caccia: et menaci cola ove ella è." Allhora il Romito disse loro, "venite meco, et mostrerollai," pregandoli tutta via che non andassero ad essa, impercio che elli per se la fuggia. Ed eglino volendola trouare, per vedere come fosse fatta, nel domandouano di altro. Il Romito vedendo che non potea piu, et hauendo paura di loro, gli condusse alla grotta, onde egli s'era partito, et disse loro, "Qui è la morte, che mi cacciua," et mostra loro l'oro che u' era, ed eglino il conobbero incontanente, et molto si cominciarono a rallegrare, et a fare insieme grande sollazzo. Allhora accommiatarono questo buono huomo; et egli sen' ando per i fatti suoi: et quelli cominciarono a dire tra loro, come elli era semplice persona. Rimasero questi scheranì tutti e tre insieme, a guardare questo hauere, e incominciarono a ragionare quello che voleano fare. L'uno rispuose et disse. "A me pare, da che Dio ci ha dato così alta ventura, che noi non ci partiamo di qui, insino a tanto che noi non ne portiamo tutto questo hauere." Et l'altro disse: "non facciamo così; l'vno di noi ne tolga alquanto, et vada alla cittade et vendalo, et rechi del pane et del vino, et di quello che ci bisogna, e di cio s' ingegni il meglio che puote: faccia egli, pur com' elli ci fornisca." A questo s' accordarono tutti e tre insieme. Il Demonio ch'è ingegnosò, e reo d'ordinare di fare quanto male e puote, mise in cuori a costui che andaua alla citta per lo fornimento, "da ch'io sarò nella cittade" (dicea fra se medesimo) "io voglio mangiare et bere quanto mi bisogna, et poi fornirmi di certe cose delle quali io ho mestiere hora al presente: et poi auuelenero quello che io porto a miei compagni: si che, da ch' elli saranno morti amendue, si saro io poi Signore di tutto quello hauere, et secondo che mi pare egli è tanto, che io saro poi il piu ricco huomo di tutto questo paese da parte d'hauere:" et come li venne in pensiero, così fece. Mr. Furnivall has also reprinted Novella xlii from the Novellae of Morlinus, ed. Naples, 1520 (reprinted at Paris in 1799); corrected by the Paris edition of Morlinus’ Works, 1855. The story is very brief, being as follows.

‘De illis qui, in Tiberi reperto thesauro, ad inuicem conspi-rantes, ueneno et ferro periere.

‘Magus magico susurro in Tiberi delitere thesaurum quadam in cauea spirituum revelatione cognouit: quo reperto, cum magnum siclorum cumulum aspiceret, communi uoto pars sociorum proximum oppidum seu castellum, epulas aliasque reś comparaturi, accedunt: ceteri uero copiosum interea ignea instruunt, thesaurumque custodiunt. Dumque in castellum convenissent, radice malorum cupiditate affecti, ut consocios thesauri parte priuarent, diro ueneno illos interimere statuerunt: cum dicto, in cauponæ epulantæ, ebriæ ac uino sepulti, aliquatenu moram fecere. In Tiberi expectantes atque esurientes, consocios de

‘Nouella indicat: nec esse de malo cogitandum: nam quod quis seminat, metit.’

The Second Nun’s Tale. There is a peculiar interest about this Tale, because, as compared with the rest, it so clearly shews us Chaucer’s mode of compilation; his advance from close translation to a more free handling of materials; and his change of rhythm, from stanzas to rimed couplets. The closeness of the translation and the rhythm alike point to early workmanship; and, most fortunately, we are not left to conjecture in this matter, since our author himself refers to this piece, by the Title of the Lyf of Seint Cecile, in his Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, l. 426. It was probably written a considerable time before the Legend. Mr. Furnivall assigns to it the conjectural date of 1373, which cannot be very far wrong. The expression in l. 78, ‘Yet preye I yow that reden that I wryte’ clearly shews that it was neither originally written as a tale of the series, nor properly revised; and the expression in l. 62, ‘And though that I vnworthy sone of Eue,’ cannot fail to strike the reader as a singular one to be put into the mouth of a nun. We possess, in fact, the Tale in its original shape, without either revision or introduction. What is called the ‘Prologue’ is, in fact, nothing of the sort; it is merely such an introduction as was suitable for the Legend at the time of translation. We have no description of the Second Nun, no introduction of her as a narrator, nor anything to connect the Tale with those that precede it. There is no authority, indeed, for attributing it to the Second Nun at all beyond the mere rubrics printed at pp. 61, 63, and 81.

It is not even made quite clear to us who the Second Nun was. We may, however, conclude that, as the Prioresse was herself a Nun, i.e. the first nun (see Prol. l. 118), the person intended is the 'Another Nonne' mentioned in the Prologue, l. 163, but mentioned nowhere else. The first line of the Canon's Yeoman's Prologue (p. 82) merely mentions 'the lyf of Seint Cecile' without any hint as to the supposed narrator of it. The Prioresse herself, on the other hand, is properly introduced to us, and her Tale is carefully inserted in its right place.

An analysis of the so-called Prologue to this Tale is given in the Notes, at p. 165; cf. note to l. 84, p. 169. Tyrwhitt pointed out that the Tale itself is translated from the Life of St. Cecilia as given in the Legenda Aurea (or Golden Legend) of Jacobus Januensis, or Jacobus a Voragine, who was archbishop of Genoa at the close of the 13th century. Tyrwhitt calls it 'literally' translated, but this is not quite the case; for our author has made several judicious alterations, suppressions, and additions, some of which are pointed out in the notes; see, e.g. notes to ll. 346, 380, 395, 442, 489, 505, and 535. However, most of the alterations occur towards the end of the story, and Chaucer follows the original author closely as far as l. 343; see note to l. 346. The best text of this Life of St. Cecilia is that given in the second edition of the Aurea Legenda by Dr. Th. Grasse, published at Leipsic in 1850. Mr. Furnivall has printed it at length, from Grasse's first edition, 1846, in his Originals and Analogues, Pt. ii. pp. 192-205; side by side with the French version of La Legende Dorée, as translated by Jehan de Vignay, printed at Paris in 1513. The suggestion was made in 'Bell's' edition of Chaucer (really edited by Mr. Jephson), that Chaucer's original was not the Latin, but the French text. A very slight comparison shews at once that this idea is wrong (as Mr. Furnivall points out), and that Chaucer unquestionably followed the Latin original; see note to l. 319, p. 174. It is, however, probable that Chaucer may have seen the French version also, as he seems to have taken from it the idea of his first four stanzas, ll. 1–28. But he has taken thence merely the general idea, and no more; see notes to l. 1, p. 165, and to l. 7, p. 166. The Invocation to the Virgin bears some resemblance to the Prioresses Prologue; see note to l. 50, p. 168. It contains, moreover, a passage which is a free translation of one in Dante's Paradiso; see note to l. 36, p. 167. I may add here that Mr. Furnivall has also reprinted two more lives of St. Cecilia, one from Caxton's Golden Legende, in English prose, ed. 1483, fol. ccclxxvij, back; the other in English verse, in a metre similar to that used by Robert of Gloucester, from MS. Ashmole 43, leaf 185, back, in the Bodleian library, Oxford. These do not throw much further light upon the matter; and, in fact, the only text really worth consulting is the Latin one of Jacobus a Voragine, which is frequently quoted in the notes. Of this Dunlop says, in his History of Fiction, 3rd ed. p. 286—‘The grand repertory of pious fiction seems to have been the Legenda Aurea of Jacobus de Voragine, a Genoese Dominican, a work entitled Golden from its popularity, on the same principle that this epithet was bestowed on the 'Ass' of Apuleius. A similar composition in Greek, by Simon Metaphrastes, written about the end of the 10th century, was the prototype of this work of the 13th century, which comprehends the lives of individual saints, whose history had already been written, or was current from tradition. The Golden Legend, however, does not consist solely of the lives of saints, but is said in the colophon to be interspersed with many other beautiful and strange relations, which were probably extracted from the Gesta Longobardorum, and other sources too obscure and voluminous to be easily traced; indeed, one of the original titles of the Legenda Aurea was Historia Lombardica. The work of [Jacobus a] Voragine was translated into French by Jean de Vignai, and was one of the three books from which Caxton's Golden Legend was compiled.'

INTRODUCTION.

Paul Lacroix, at p. 426, is the following brief account of Saint Cecilia. ‘Under the reign of Alexander Severus, many illustrious martyrs were put to death: St. Cecilia, her husband, and her brother-in-law among the number. St. Cecilia was descended from a very ancient family which dated back to the time of Tarquin the Proud; she belonged to the same house as Metella, many of whose children were raised to the honours of triumph and of the consulate in the heyday of the Roman republic. Her parents gave her in marriage to a young Roman patrician, named Valerian. But Cecilia had dedicated her virginity to God, and her husband, converted to the faith by her arguments and entreaties, respected her vow, and himself converted his brother Tiburcius. They all three relieved their persecuted brethren, and this Christian charity betrayed them. In spite of their distinguished birth, their wealth and their connections, they were arrested, and their refusal to sacrifice to the false gods led to their being condemned to death. We find a multitude of analogous occurrences in Gaul, and also in the most distant provinces of the East.’ On the preceding page of the same book is figured a copy of a piece of mosaic work of the third or fourth century, which was taken from the cemetery of St. Sixtus, and is preserved in the church of St. Cecilia, at Rome. It represents St. Cecilia and St. Valerian, with roses and lilies in bloom at their feet, and having on each side of them a palm-tree laden with fruit, a symbol of their victories and of their meritorious martyrdom. Upon one of the palm-trees is a phoenix with a ‘gloria’ round its head, the ancient symbol of resurrection.

The following interesting account of the church and statue of St. Cecilia is extracted from Mrs. Jameson’s beautiful work upon Sacred and Legendary Art.

‘According to her wish, the house of Cecilia was consecrated as a church, the chamber in which she suffered martyrdom being regarded as a spot of peculiar sanctity. There is mention of a council held in the church of St. Cecilia by Pope Symmachus, in the year 500. Afterwards, in the troubles and invasions of the barbarians, this ancient church fell into ruin, and was rebuilt by Pope Paschal I. in the ninth century. It is related that, while engaged in this work, Paschal had a dream, in which St. Cecilia appeared to him, and revealed the spot in which she lay buried; accordingly search was made, and her body was found in the cemetery of Calixtus, wrapt in a shroud of gold tissue, and round her feet a linen cloth dipt in her blood: near her were the remains of Valerian, Tibertius, and Maximus, which, together with hers, were deposited in the same church, now St. Cecilia-in-Trastevere. The little room, containing her bath, in which she was murdered or martyred, is now a chapel. The rich frescoes with which it was decorated are in a state of utter ruin from age and damp; but the machinery for heating the bath, the pipes, the stoves, yet remain. This church, having again fallen into ruin, was again repaired, and sumptuously embellished in the taste of the sixteenth century, by Cardinal Sfondrati. On this occasion the sarcophagus containing the body of St. Cecilia was opened with great solemnity in the presence of several cardinals and dignitaries of the Church, among others Cardinal Baronius, who has given us an exact description of the appearance of the body, which had been buried by Pope Paschal in 820, when exhumed in 1599. "She was lying," says Baronius, "within a coffin of cypress wood, enclosed in a marble sarcophagus; not in the manner of one dead and buried, that is, on her back, but on her right side, as one asleep; and in a very modest attitude; covered with a simple stuff of taffety, having her head bound with cloth, and at her feet the remains of the cloth of gold and silk which Pope Paschal had found in her tomb." Clement VIII ordered that the relics should remain untouched, inviolate; and the cypress coffin was enclosed in a silver shrine, and replaced under the altar. This re-interment took place in presence of the pope and clergy, with great pomp and solemnity, and the people crowded in from the neighbouring towns to assist at the ceremony. Stefano Maderno, who was then in the employment of the Cardinal Sfondrati as sculptor and architect, and acted as his secretary, was not, we may suppose, absent on this occasion; by the order of the Cardinal he executed the beautiful and celebrated statue of "St. Cecilia lying dead," which was intended to commemorate the attitude in which she was found. It is thus described by Sir Charles Bell:—"The body lies on its side, the limbs a little drawn up; the hands are delicate and fine,—they are not locked, but crossed at the wrists: the arms are stretched out. The drapery is beautifully modelled, and modestly covers the limbs. The head is enveloped in linen, but the general form is seen, and the artist has contrived to convey by its position, though not offensively, that it is separated from the body. A gold circlet is round the neck, to conceal the place of decollation(?). It is the statue of a lady, perfect in form, and affecting from the resemblance to reality in the drapery of white marble, and the unspotted appearance of the statue altogether. It lies as no living body could lie, and yet correctly, as the dead when left to expire,—I mean in the gravitation of the limbs."

'It must be remembered that Cecilia did not suffer decollation; that her head was not separated from the body; and the gold band is to conceal the wound in the neck: otherwise, this description of the statue agrees exactly with the description which Cardinal Baronius has given of the body of the saint when found in 1599.

'The ornaments round the shrine, of bronze and rare and precious marbles, are in the worst taste, and do not harmonize with the pathetic simplicity of the figure.

'At what period St. Cecilia came to be regarded as the patron saint of music, and accompanied by the musical attributes, I cannot decide. It is certain that in ancient devotional representations she is not so distinguished; nor in the old Italian series of subjects from her life have I found any in which she is figured as singing, or playing upon instruments.'

The Canon's Yeoman's Prologue, and Tale. The Prologue, as well as the Tale itself, belongs to the very latest period of Chaucer's work. This is clear at once, from its originality, as well as from the metre, and the careless ease of the rhythm, which sometimes almost degenerates into slovenliness, as though our author had written some of it in hot haste, with the intention of revising it more carefully afterwards. Besides, the poet has boldly improved upon his plan of the pilgrims' stories as laid down in his Prologue. We have there no hint of the Canon nor of his Yeoman; they are two new pilgrims who join themselves to the rest upon the road. A dispute arising between the master and the man, the former is put out of countenance, and actually rides away for very sorrow and shame (l. 702); but the man remains, to denounce the cupidity of the alchemists and to expose their trickery. Tyrwhitt remarks:—'The introduction of the Chanouns Yeman to tell a tale, at a time when so many of the original characters remain to be called upon, appears a little extraordinary. It should seem, that some sudden resentment had determined Chaucer to interrupt the regular course of his work, in order to insert a satire against the alchemists. That their pretended science was much cultivated about this time, and produced its usual evils, may fairly be inferred from the Act, which was passed soon after, 5 Henry IV, cap. iv. to make it Felonie to multiplie gold or siuer, or to use the art of multiplication.' He adds—'The first considerable coinage of gold in this country was begun by Edward III in the year 1343, and according to Camden (in his Remains, art. Money), "the Alchemists did affirm, as an unwritten verity, that the Rose-nobles, which were coined soon after, were made by projection or multiplication Alchemical of Raymund Lully in the Tower of London." Ashmole, in his Theatrum Chemicum, p. 443, has repeated this ridiculous story concerning Lully with additional circumstances, as if he really believed it; though Lully, by the best accounts, had been dead above twenty years before Edward III began to coin gold.'

1 Tyrwhitt further explains that a poem in Ashmole's volume, called Hermes Bird, and by him attributed to Raymund Lully, is really a poem of Lydgate's, printed by Caxton with the title The Chorle and the Bird.
The above-mentioned volume by Ashmole, entitled Theatrum Chemicum, is a very singular production. And, perhaps, not the least singular circumstance is that Ashmole actually gives 'The Tale of the Chanon's Yeman, written by our ancient and famous poet, Geoffrey Chaucer,' Prologue and all, at full length (pp. 227-256), under the impression, apparently, that Chaucer was really a believer in the science! He says—'One reason why I selected out of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales that of the Chanon's Yeoman was, to let the world see what notorious cheating there has been ever used, under pretence of this true (though injur'd) Science; Another is, to shew that Chaucer himselfe was a Master therein.' It is indeed true that Chaucer had examined into alchemy very closely, but it is perfectly clear that he had made up his mind, with his strong English common sense, that the whole matter was a delusion. Had he lived in the present century, he could hardly have spoken out in more assured terms. In a similar manner he had studied astrology, and was equally a disbeliever in all but the terms of it and a few of its most general and vague assertions. He says expressly, in his Treatise on the Astrolabie (ed. Skeat, pt. ii. sec. 4, l. 34)—'natheless, theise ben obseruauncez of iudicial matiere & rytes of paiens [pagans], in which my spirit ne hath no feith, ne no knowyng of hir horoscopum.' But it is evident that the believers in alchemy had to make the best use they could of Chaucer's language, by applying it as being directed only against notorious cheats; and accordingly, we find in The Ordinall of Alchimy, by Thomas Norton of Bristol, printed in Ashmole's collection, various passages imitated from Chaucer, such as, e. g. that at p. 17:—

'The fals man walketh from Towne to Towne,
For the most parte in a threed-bare Gowne,' &c.

And again, George Ripley, in his Compound of Alchymie,

1 It is a totally different work from the Latin collection of alchemical works, also called Theatrum Chemicum, so often cited in my notes.
dedicated to King Edward IV, printed in the same collection, says, at p. 153:—

'Their Clothes be bawdy and woryn threde-bare,
Men may them smell for Multyplyers where they go,' &c.

Ashmole's work contains several treatises which profess to explain alchemy, nearly all alike couched in mysterious, and often in ridiculous language. Such are Norton's Ordinall of Alchymy, Ripley's Compound of Alchymie, Liber Patris Sapientiae, Hermes Bird (really Lydgate's poem of The Churl and the Bird), Chaucer's Canon's Yeoman's Tale (!), Pearce the Blacke Monke upon the Elixir, Charnock's Breviary of Naturall Philosophy 2, Ripley's Mistery of Alchymists, an extract from Gower's Confessio Amantis, Aristotle's Secreta Secretorum, translated by Lydgate; and so on. On the whole, the book is equally curious and dull.

It would hardly be possible to give much idea of alchemy in a brief space, and it would certainly be unprofitable. The curious will find an excellent article upon it (entitled 'Alchemy') in the new edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica; and a history of it, by no means uninteresting, in the first volume of Thomson's History of Chemistry. In Whewell's History of the Inductive Sciences, 2nd edition, 1847, vol. i. p. 320, the following notice of it occurs, which I quote for the reader's convenience.—'Like other kinds of Mysticism, Alchemy seems to have grown out of the notions of moral, personal, and mythological qualities, which men associated with terms, of which the primary application was to physical properties. This is the form in which the subject is presented to us in the earliest writings which we possess on the subject of chemistry.

1 At p. 470, Ashmole gives a brief account of Chaucer, made up from Speght, Bale, Pits, and others, of no particular value. At p. 226, he gives an engraving of the marble monument erected to Chaucer's memory in Westminster Abbey, by Nicholas Brigham, A.D. 1556.

2 This is somewhat amusing. Charnock describes his numerous misadventures, and it is not clear that he preserved his faith in alchemy unshaken.
those of Geber of Seville, who is supposed to have lived in the eighth or ninth century. The very titles of Geber's works show the notions on which this pretended science proceeds. They are, "Of the Search of Perfection;" "Of the Sum of Perfection, or of the Perfect Magistry;" "Of the Invention of Verity, or Perfection." The basis of this phraseology is the distinction of metals into more or less perfect; gold being the most perfect, as being the most valuable, most beautiful, most pure, most durable; silver the next; and so on. The "Search of Perfection" was, therefore, the attempt to convert other metals into gold; and doctrines were adopted which represented the metals as all compounded of the same elements, so that this was theoretically possible. But the mystical trains of association were pursued much further than this; gold and silver were held to be the most noble of metals; gold was their King, and silver their Queen. Mythological associations were called in aid of these fancies, as had been done in astrology. Gold was Sol, the sun; silver was Luna, the moon; copper, iron, tin, lead, were assigned to Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn. The processes of mixture and heat were spoken of as personal actions and relations, struggles and victories. Some elements were conquerors, some conquered; there existed preparations which possessed the power of changing the whole of a body into a substance of another kind: these were called magisteries. When gold and quicksilver are combined, the king and the queen are married, to produce children of their own kind. It will easily be conceived, that when chemical operations were described in phraseology of this sort, the enthusiasm of the fancy would be added to that of the hopes, and observation would not be permitted to correct the delusion, or to suggest sounder and more rational views.

baser metals into gold, was imagined to be also a universal medicine, to have the gift of curing or preventing diseases, prolonging life, producing bodily strength and beauty: the philosophers’ stone was finally invested with every desirable efficacy which the fancy of the “philosophers” could devise.’

See also Dr. Whewell’s account of the doctrine of “the four elements” in the same work; vol. iii. p. 121.

The history of the rise and growth of the ideas involved in alchemy is ably treated of in the article in the Encyclopaedia Britannica already referred to; it is of some interest to note how some of the more important notions were developed. From ancient Persia came the idea of a correspondence between the heavenly bodies and parts of the human frame, alluded to in Chaucer’s Treatise on the Astrolabie, and in Shakespeare’s Twelfth Night, i. 3. 1481. From ancient India came the idea of a peregrination of sinful souls through the animal, vegetable, and even the mineral world, till they were absorbed into Deity. Hence was further evolved the notion of a transmutation of elements. The Greeks held that different deities had under their protection and guidance different types of men; an idea still preserved in our words mercurial, jovial, and saturnine. The school of Hippocrates held the doctrine of the four elements, or primary substances of which all others were made, an idea first mentioned (it is said) by Empedocles; to which Aristotle added a fifth element, that of ether (Arist. de Caelo, i. 2). But this idea is probably older; for we find five bhúta’s, or elements, enumerated in Sanskrit, viz. earth, fire, water, air, and ether; see Benfey’s Skt. Dict. s. v. bhú, p. 658. Another very ancient notion is that male and female principles existed in all three worlds alike, animal, vegetable, and mineral; from which it followed that the union of two metals

1 ‘Sir To. What shall we do else? Were we not born under Taurus? Sir And. Taurus! that’s sides and heart. Sir To. No, sir; it’s legs and thighs.’ Both are wrong, of course, as Shakespeare knew. Chaucer says—‘Aries hath thin heued [head], and Taurus thy nekke and thy throte;’ Astrolabie, pt. i. sec. 21. l. 50. could produce a third. It was argued that ‘monstrosities are the productions of diseased metals (really alloys), which, if properly treated, may be cured, and will turn to gold, or at least silver. The second stage in this imitation of nature is to obtain, by tincture or projection, solid or liquid gold, the cure of all evils;’ Encycl. Brit. i. 463, col. 2. This notion is still preserved in the word arsenic (Gk. ἀρσενικόν, male). It was universally believed that nature produced changes in the substance of various metals by slow degrees, and the great object of alchemy was to produce the same changes quickly. The chief names in connection with the progress of alchemy are Geber, a Sabaean, who flourished about A.D. 800; Avicenna, a native of Shiraz, born A.D. 980, died June, 1037; Albertus Magnus, born about 1193, died Nov. 15, 1280, who uses much more intelligible language than alchemists usually indulge in; Raymund Lully, born at Majorca in 1235, a scholar of Roger Bacon, who was himself deeply imbued with the mystery of alchemy; Arnoldus de Villa Nova (mentioned by Chaucer), so named because born at Villeneuve, in Provence, in 1240; and others. Paracelsus¹, a Swiss physician (born in 1493, died 1541) was something better than a mere alchemist. He did something towards destroying the notion of the necessity of consulting astrological influences, and prepared the way for the discoveries of Van Helmont (born at Brussels in 1577, died 1644), with whom the history of modern chemistry may be said to begin. Van Helmont was the inventor of two new terms, gas² and blas, the former of which remains in common use, though the latter is wholly forgotten.

The great store-house of treatises upon alchemy is the Latin collection, in five volumes, called Theatrum Chemicum. I have made considerable use of the edition of this work published in 1660, which I have frequently quoted in the Notes. We

² It is useless to try and discover an etymology for this word. It was invented wittingly. The most that can be said was that Van Helmont may have been thinking of the Dutch geest, a spirit; E. ghost.
hence gather that most of the authors upon the subject wished men to believe that the true secrets of the science were known to themselves only; yet they all learnt more or less of a certain jargon which they continually repeated, attributing their empirical rules to Herme's, or Geber, or other supposed masters. The same ideas, alleged results, and supposed principles continually recur; and the brief statement of a few of these will at once shew what the reader of an alchemical treatise may expect to find. Much depended on the supposed powers of certain numbers. Thus, there were three primary colours, black, white, and red\(^1\), from which all others were produced by combination; Theat. Chem. iv. 536. According to Gower, there were really three kinds of the philosopher's stone, viz. animal, vegetable, and mineral. Some said it was composed of three parts; body, spirit, and soul—corpus, spiritus, and anima; Ashmole's Th. Ch. p. 382. Again, there were four elements; four complexions of nature or temperaments; four colours (said some), viz. white, black, citrine, and red; four savours, insipid, acid, sweet, and bitter; four odours, sweet, fetid, intense, and slight (remissus), Theat. Chem. iii. 82. In particular, there were four spirits, sulphur, sal ammoniac, quick-silver, and arsenic; see note to line 778, p. 189; also four states or conditions, hot, cold, wet, and dry; Theat. Chem. iv. 537. There were seven planets; and because there were seven planets, it followed that every planet had a corresponding note in the musical scale of seven notes. Every planet had its proper colour; and, in this view, there were seven colours, sable, vert, gules, or, argent, sanguine, and umber; Batman upon Bartholome, lib. 19, c. 37. Every planet had its proper metal; there were therefore seven metals; see the extract from Gower, p. 193. Now, as all substances are made of the same four elements, it follows that if a substance can be decomposed, and reunited in different proportions, its nature may be so changed that it shall become another substance.

\(^1\) A strange selection; red, blue, and yellow would have been better.
INTRODUCTION.

Many substances, if subjected to heat, are destroyed; but metals are not so, and therefore became the favourite subject for experiments. It was laid down that one metal could be transmuted into another, but only after having been first reduced into its primary elements; Theat. Chem. iv. 531. Ere long, it was accepted as an axiom that all baser metals could be transmuted either into gold, or sol, typified by the sun, or into silver, or luna, typified by the moon; these being the two extremes between which the other five metals were ranged. It was agreed that the chief agents in producing this transmutation were quicksilver and sulphur, and of these quicksilver was the more important; so much so, that the mention of quicksilver meets us everywhere, and no alchemist could work without it. It was also agreed that certain processes must be gone through in a due order, generally ten or twelve in number; and if any one of them failed, the whole work had to be begun afresh. They are commonly described as (1) calcination, (2) solution, (3) separation of the elements, (4) conjunction, (5) putrefaction, (6) coagulation, (7) cibation, (8) sublimation, (9) fermentation, (10) exaltation, (11) augmentation or multiplication; and (12) projection; Theat. Chem. ii. 175, and Ripley's Compound of Alchemy. By insisting on the necessity of all these processes, they sufficiently guarded against all chances of an unfavourable result by securing that a result could not very well be arrived at.

The moment that we attempt to analyse their processes more closely, we are met by two difficulties that are simply insuperable; the first, that the same name is clearly used to denote quite different substances, and the second, that the same substance is called by many different names. Hence also arose endless evasions, and arrogant claims to pretended secrets; it

1 The Indian god Siva was actually worshipped under the form of quicksilver. Professor Cowell refers me to Marco Polo, ed. Yule, ii. 300, and to his own edition of Colebrooke's Essays, i. 433; also to the semi-mythic life of Sankara A'chárya, the great reformer of the eighth century.
was often said that the quicksilver of the alchemists was a substance only known to adepts, and that those who used only ordinary quicksilver knew nothing of the matter. The master could thus always mystify his pupils, and make it appear that he alone, and no one else, knew what he was talking about.

Yet it was frequently alleged that the experiments did succeed.
The easiest explanation of this matter is, that the hopes of the alchemists were doubtless buoyed up by the fact that every now and then the experiments appeared to succeed; and it is easy to shew how. The close affinity of quicksilver for gold is well known. I copy the following from a book on experiments, which really suffices to explain the whole matter. 'If a sovereign be rubbed with mercury, it will lose its usual appearance, and appear as if silvered over; the attraction of the gold for the mercury being sufficient to cause a coating of it to remain.
When it is wished to remove the silvery appearance, dip the sovereign in a dilute solution of nitric acid, which will entirely take it off.' Now the alchemists tell us that quicksilver must always be used in all experiments; and they constantly recommend the introduction into the substances experimented on of a small quantity of gold, which they thought would be increased.
The experiments constantly failed; and whenever they failed, the pieces of molten metal were carefully saved, to be used over and over again. The frequent introduction of small quantities of gold caused that metal to accumulate; and if, by any favourable process, the quicksilver was separated from the mass, a considerable quantity of gold would now and then actually appear.
This account is so much in accordance with all that we read that we may confidently accept the conclusion of Dr. Thomson, the author of the History of Chemistry, that the vaunted philosopher's stone was certainly an amalgam of gold; which, 'if projected into melted lead or tin, and afterwards cupellated,

1 This explains why the alchemists, in seeking gold, sometimes supposed that they had obtained silver.
would leave a portion of gold; all the gold, of course, that existed previously in the amalgam.' He adds that 'the alchemists who prepared the amalgam could not be ignorant that it contained gold;' a statement which I am inclined to modify by suggesting that it may very easily have contained more gold than they supposed it did. In a word, we may conclude that some deceived themselves, and others were conscious cheats.

The real secret of the long reign of alchemy, and of the tardy appearance of scientific chemistry, lies in this—that men, as a rule, have more faith in their theoretical notions than in the practical evidence of their senses. The history of alchemy is, in fact, full of instruction, and its lessons have not yet all been learnt. Not to apply them to any of the more popular delusions of the day (which would here be out of place), I would apply them to a subject in which students of Chaucer may be supposed to take a special interest, viz. that of English etymology. A good deal of what is called 'etymology' is the merest alchemy; and the guesswork which is sometimes dignified by that name is often as baseless and as valueless as the dreams of the so-called adepts. Perhaps there is no book which better illustrates the history of the English language than Richardson's Dictionary; the value of the profusion of quotations, each with its proper reference, is very great. Yet the etymology is remarkably poor, owing to the number of guesses which were too rashly recorded there. Take, e.g. his account of the word hod. 'Hod, perhaps hoved, hov'd, hod; past part. of A.S. heafan, to heave. That which is heaved or raised,' &c. Yet the whole of this breaks down when we remember that hebban [not heafan] is a strong verb, and that its past part. became hoven, whilst still conjugated as a strong verb; and afterwards heav'd, when it was treated as a weak one: the form hov'd being simply impossible either way. Students may do better than this, if they will bear in mind two or three leading principles, such as (1) that the investigation of the history of a word must precede all attempts to 'derive' it; (2) that it is of small utility to imagine how a word might have been formed, especially when, as is sometimes the case, there is good evidence as to how it was formed: (3) that the laws of language must be studied, it being absurd to make up words in opposition to all that we know of Anglo-Saxon grammar; and (4) that the light afforded by comparative philology is to be thankfully accepted, and not shut out as if it were non-existent. In particular, it is to be remembered that the history of many words is insufficiently recorded, and in such cases we have no right to assume an origin which we cannot prove, but should be content to say that we do not know it. The one besetting sin of students of English etymology is that few are content to give up the pursuit of that which lies beyond them; like the alchemists, men are prone to pretend to know that of which they can, after all, give no intelligible explanation. Like the alchemists, many invent their facts, or distort and wrest them, so as to make them agree with preconceived theories. This is strikingly exemplified in many of our older provincial glossaries, wherein the definitions of words, instead of being honestly stated, are often tortured into agreement with a supposed ‘etymology.’ Thus Ray, in his excellent Collection of Provincial Words, defines belive as ‘anon, by and by, or towards night;’ merely in order to introduce his ‘etymology,’ that belive is a corruption of by the eve, with a substitution of the French le for the English the. Skinner’s Lexicon contains hundreds of such absurdities, many of which were copied into Johnson’s Dictionary, and some of them are certainly still believed in. For a sample of these, see the ‘Garland culled from Skinner’ in my Introduction to Ray’s Collection of Provincial Words, pp. xxii–xxvi, published by the English Dialect Society. And to this day correspondents write to Notes and Queries about certain hard words, asking for the ‘etymology’ of them, instead of asking for the history of them, which is the more important matter. No wonder that they often receive six or seven different answers, all perhaps equally unsatisfactory and useless, and learn no more about the matter than they knew at first. Of course the etymology will explain a word, but only if it happens to be right; the history of the word is, however, a surer guide, because it deals with quotations and facts, not with theories and fancies. I fear that we English have still much to learn before we are finally delivered from the alchemy of those who only work by guess, and from the tyranny of ingenious assertions.

A list of books most useful for explaining Chaucer, and of the Dictionaries used in compiling the Glossarial Index, is given in my former Introduction, at p. lxxvi.

The present volume is, in the main, my own work. My chief obligations have been to Mr. Furnivall's Six-text edition, and to Tyrwhitt's notes. I wish to record my thanks to Miss Gunning, of Cambridge, and Miss Wilkinson, of Dorking, who considerably lightened the labour of preparing the Glossary by copying out, with proper references, and in many cases, with explanations, the words explained there. I have added the explanations where they were omitted, and revised the whole; the etymological remarks being my own throughout. A considerable part of the Notes is due to my own reading, and has not appeared before; this is particularly the case with respect to the Canon's Yeoman's Tale.

In the present (revised) edition, a few new notes have been added; and an Index has been subjoined, shewing where to find at once the more important explanations of words and subject-matter.

NOTE ON THE PARDONER'S TALE.

It has been pointed out by Mr. Tawney and by Mr. Francis that this tale occurs in the Vedabhha Jātaka, the 48th in Fausboll's edition. The tale was therefore known to the Buddhists.
GROUP B. THE TALE OF THE MAN OF LAWE.

[The Introduction to the Man of Law's Prologue, and the Prologue itself, are printed in The Prioresses Tale, &c. (Clarendon Press Series), pp. 1-5. A long extract from The Tale itself (ll. 134-693) is given in Specimens of Early English, ed. Morris and Skeat, pp. 249-269.]

Here begynneth the man of lawe his tale.

In Surrye whylom dwelte a companye
Of chapmen riche, and therto sadde and trewe,
That wyde-wher senten her spicerye,
Clothes of gold, and'satins riche of hewe;
Her chaffar was so thrifty and so newe,
That euery wyght hath deyntee to chaffare
With hem, and eek to sellen hem her ware.

Now fel it, that the maistres of that sort
Han shapen hem to Rome for to wende;
Were it for chapmanhode or for disport,
Noon other message wolde they thider sende,
But comen hem-self to Rome, this is the ende;
And in swich place, as thoughte hem auantage
For her entent, they take her herbergage.

Soiourned han thise marchants in that toun
A certein tyme, as fel to her plesance,
And so bifel, that thexcellent renoun
Of themperoures doughter, dame Custance,
Reported was, with euery circumstance,
Vn-to thise Surryen marchants in swich wyse ¹,

This was the commune voys of everie man—
'Our Emperour of Rome, god him see,
A daughter hath that, sin the world bigan,
To rekne as wel hir goodnesse as beautee,
Nas neuere swich another as is she;
I prey to god in honour hir susteene,
And wolde she were of al Europe the queene.

In hir is hey beautee, with-oute pryde,
Yowthe, with-oute grenehede or folye;
To alle hir werkes vertu is hir gyde,
Humblesse hath slayn in hir al tirannye.
She is mirour of alle curteisye;
Hir herte is verray chambr of holynesse,
Hir hand, ministre of fredom for almesse.'

And al this voys was soth, as god is trewe,
But now to purpos lat vs turne agayn;
Thise marchants han doon fraught her shippes newe,
And, whan they han this blisful mayden seyn,
Hoom to Surrye ben they went ful fayn,
And doon her nedes as they han doon yore,
And lyuen in wele; I can sey yow no more.

Now fel it, that thise marchants stode in grace
Of him, that was the sowdan of Surrye;
For whan they came from any strange place,
He wolde, of his benigne curteisye,
Make hem good chere, and bisily espye

Amonges othere thinges, specially
Thise marchants han him told of dame Custance,
So gret noblesse in ernest, serioûsly,
That this sowdan hath caught so gret plesance
To han hir figure in his remembrance,
That al his lust and al his bisy cure
Was for to loue hir whyl his lyf may dure.

Parauenture in thilke large book
Which that men clepe the heuen, ywriten was
With sterres, whan that he his birthe took,
That he for loue shulde han his deth, alas!
For in the sterres, clerer than is glas,
Is writen, god wot, who so coude it rede,
The deth of evey man, withouten drede.

In sterres, many a winter ther-biforn,
Was writen the deth of Ector, Achilles,
Of Pompei, Iuius, er they were born;
The stryf of Thebes; and of Ercules,
Of Sampson, Turnus, and of Socrates
The deth; but mennes wittes ben so dulle,
That no wyght can wel rede it atte fulle.

This sowdan for his priuée conseil sente,
And, shortly of this mater for to pace,
He hath to hem declared his entente,
And seyde hem certein, 'but he myghte haue grace
To han Custance with-inne a litel space,
He nas but deed;' and charged hem, in hye,
To shapen for his lyf som remedye.
Diuerse men diuerse thinges seyden;
They argumenten\(^1\), casten vp and doun;
Many a subtil resoun forth they leyden,
They spoken of magik and abusioun;
But finally, as in conclusioun,
They can not seen in that non auantage,
Ne in non other wey, saue mariage.

Than seye they ther-in swich difficultee
By way of resoun, for to speke al playn,
By cause that ther was swich diuersitee
Bitwene her bothe lawes, that they sayn,
They trowe ‘that no cristen prince wolde fayn
Wedden his child vnder oure lawes swete
That vs were taught by Mahoun our prophete.’

And he answerde, ‘rather than I lese
Custance, I wol be cristned doutelees;
I mot ben hires, I may non other chese.
I prey yow holde youre arguments in pees;
Saueth my lyf, and beth nought recchelees
To getten hir that hath my lyf in cure;
For in this wo I may not longe endure.’

What nedeth gretter dilatacioun?
I seye, by tretys and embassadrye,
And by the popes mediacioun,
And al the chirche, and al the chiualrye,
That, in destruccioun of Maumettrye,
And in encrees of cristes lawe dere,
They ben accorded, so as ye shal here;

How that the sowdan and his baronage
And alle his lieges shulde ycristned be,
And he shal han Custance in mariage,
And certein gold, I not what quantitee,
And her-to founden suffisant seurtee;
This same accord was sworn on eyther syde;
Now, fayre Custance, almyghty god thee gyde!

Now wolde som men wayten, as I gesse,
That I shulde tellen al the purveiance
That themperour, of his gret noblesse,
Hath shapen for his daughter dame Custance.
Wel may men knowe that so gret ordinance
May no man tellen in a litel clause
As was arrayed for so hey a cause.

Bishopes ben shapen with hir for to wende,
Lordes, ladyes, knyghtes of renoun,
And other folk ynow, this is the ende;
And notifyed is thurgh-out the toun
That euery wyght, with gret deuocioun,
Shulde preyen crist that he this mariage
Receyue in gree, and spede this viage.

The day is comen of hir departing,
I sey, the woful day fatal is come,
That ther may be no lenger tarying,
But forthward they hem dressen, alle and some;
Custance, that was with sorwe al overcome,
Ful pale arist, and dresseth hir to wende;
For wel she seeth ther is non other ende.
Allas! what wonder is it though she wept,
That shal be sent to strange nacioun
Fro frendes, that so tendrely hir kepte,
And to be bounden vnder subieccioun
Of oon, she knoweth not his condicioun.
Housbondes ben alle goode, and han ben yore,

Imprudent emperour of Rome, allas!
Was ther no philosophre in al thy toun?
Is no tyme bet than other in swich cas?
Of viage is ther non eleccioun,
Namely to folk of hey condicioun,
Not whan a rote is of a birthe yknowe?
Allas! we ben to lewed or to slowe.

To shippe is brought this woful faire mayde Solempnely with euery circumstance.
'Now Iesu crist be with yow alle,' she sayde,

And thus hath Crist ymaad Custance a queene.

But who was woful, if I shal nat lye,
Of this wedding but Dønegild, and na mo,
The kinges moder, ful of tirannye?
Hir thoughte hir cursed herte brast atwo;
She wolde nought hir sone had do so;
Hir thoughte a despit, that he sholde take
So strange a creature vn-to his make.

Me list nat of the chafl nor of the stree
Maken so long a tale, as of the corn.
What sholde I tellen of the roialtee
At mariage, or which cours goth biforn,
Who bloweth in a trompe or in an horn?
The fruyt of euery tale is for to seye;
They ete, and drinke, and daunce, and singe, and pleye.

[King Alla is called away to Scotland, to fight against enemies;
he leaves Constance in the care of his Constable.]
The tyme is come, a knaue child she ber;
Mauricius at the fontstoon they him calle;
This Constable doth forth come a messager,
And wroot vn-to his king, that cleped was Alle,
How that this blisful tyding is bifalle,
And othere tydings speedful for to seye;
He taketh the lettre, and forth he goth his weye.

This messager, to don his auantage,
Vn-to the kinges moder rydeth swythe,
And salueth hir ful fayre in his langage,
‘Madame,’ quod he, ‘ye may be glad and blythe,
And thanke¹ god an hundred thousand sythe;
My lady queen hath child, with-outen doute,
To Ioye and blisse of² al this regne aboute.

Lo, heer the lettres seled of this thing,
That I mot bere with al the haste I may;
If ye wol ought vn-to your sone the king,
I am your servaunt, bothe nyght and day.’
Donegild answerde, ‘as now at this tym, nay;
But heer al nyght I wol thou take thy reste,
Tomorwe wol I sey thee what me leste.’

This messager drank sadly ale and wyn,
And stolen were his lettres priuuly
Out of his box, whyl he sleep as a swyn;
And countrefeted was ful subtilly
Another lettre, wrought ful sinfully,
Vn-to the king direct of this matere
Fro his Constable, as ye shul after here.

Ycome, by charmes or by sorcerye,
And euery wyght hateth hir companye.'

Wo was this king whan he this lettre had seyn,
But to no wyghte he tolde his sorwes sore,
But of his owen honde he wroot agayn,
' Welcome the sonde of crist for euermore
To me, that am now lerned in his lore ;

This lettre he seleth, priuely wepinge,
Which to the messager was take sone,
And forth he goth ; ther is no more to done.

O messager, fulfild of dronkenesse,
Strong is thy breeth, thy lymes faltren ay,
And thou biwreyest alle secrenesse.

Fy, mannish, fy! o nay, [parfay], I ly,
Fy, feendly spirit, for I dar wel telle,
Though thou heer walke, thy spirit is in helle!

This messager comth fro the king agayn,
And at the kinges modres court he lyghte,
And she was of this messager ful fayn,

Hir and hir yonge son, and al hir gere,
He sholde putte, and croude hir fro the lond,
And charge hir that she neuer eft com there.’

Explicit secunda pars. Sequitur pars tercia.

Alla the king comth hoom, sone after this,
Vnto his castel of the which I tolde,
And axeth wher his wyf and his child is.
The Constable gan aboute his herte colde,
And pleynly al the maner he him tolde
As ye han herd, I can telle it no bettre,
And sheweth the king his seel and [eek]² his lettre,

And seyde, 'lord, as ye comaunded me
Vp peyne of deeth, so hauë I doon certeyn.'
This messager tormented was til he Moste biknowe and tellen, plat and pleyn,

And thus, by wit and subtil enqueringe,
Ymagined was by whom this harm gan springe.

But in what wyse certeynly I noot.
The effect is this, that Alla, out of drede,
His moder slow, that men may pleynly rede,
For that she traytour was to hir ligeaunce.
Thus endeth olde Donegild with meschaunce.

The sorwe that this Alla nyght and day
Maketh for his wyf and for his child also,
Ther is no tonge that it telle may.
But now wol I vn-to Custance go,
That fleteth in the see, in peyne and wo,
Fyue yeer and more, as lyked Cristes sonde,
Er that hir ship approched vn-to \(^1\) londe.

Vnder an hethen Castel, atte laste,
Of which the name in my text nought I fynde,
Custance and eek hir child the see vp-caste.
Almighty god, that saueth \(^2\) al mankynde
Haue on Custance and on hir child som mynde,
That fallen is in hethen land eft-sone,
In point to spille, as I shal telle yow sone.

Doun from the Castel comth ther many a wyght
To gauren on this ship and on Custance.
But shortly, from the Castel on a nyght
The lordes styward—god yeue him meschaunce!—

Now lat vs stinte of Custance but a throwe,
And speke we of the Romayn Emperour,
That out of Surrype hath by lettres knowe
The slaughter of cristen folk, and dishonour
Don to his daughter by a fals traytour,
I mene the cursed wikked sowdanesse,
That at the feste leet sleen both more and lesse.

For which this emperour hath sent anoon
His senator, with roial ordinance,
And othere lordes, got wot, many oon,
On Surryens to taken hey vengeance.
They brennen, sleen, and bringe hem to meschance
Ful many a day; but shortly, this is thende,
Homward to Rome thei shapen hem to wende.

This senator repaireth with victorie
To Romeward, sayling ful roially,
And mette the ship dryuing, as seith the storie,
In which Custance sit ful pitously.
No-thing ne¹ knew he what she was, ne why
She was in swich array; ne she nil seye
Of hir estaat, although² she sholde deye.

He bringeth hir to Rome, and to his wyf
He yaf hir, and hir yonge sone also;
And with the senator she ladde her lyf.
Thus can our lady bringen out of wo
Woful Custance, and many another mo.
And longe tyme dwelled she in that place,
In holy werkes èuer, as was hir grace.

¹ F. Cm. om. ne; the rest have it.

The senatoures wyf hir aunte was,
But for al that she knew hir neuer the more;
I wol no lenger tarien in this cas,
But to king Alla, which I spak of yore,
That for his wyf wepeth¹ and syketh sore,
I wol retourne, and lete I wol Custance
Vnder the senatoures gouernance.

King Alla, which that hadde his moder slayn,
Vpon a day fil in swich repentance,
That, if I shortly tellen shal and playn,
To Rome he comth, to receyuen his penance
And putte him in the popes ordinance
In hey and low, and Iesu Crist bisoughte
Foryeue his wikked werkes that he wroughte.

The fame anon through Rome toun² is born,
How Alla king shal come in pilgrimage,
By herbergeours that wenten him biforn;
For which the senatour, as was vsage,
Rood him agayn, and many of his linage,
As wel to shewen his hey magnificence
As to don any king a reverence.

Greet chere doth this noble senatour
To king Alla, and he to him also;
Euerich of hem doth other greet honour;
And so bifel that, in a day or two,
This senatour is to king Alla go
To feste, and shortly, if I shal nat lye, Custances sone wente in his companye.

¹ So all but E., which puts wepeth after That.

Som men wolde seyn, at requeste of Custance,
This senatour hath lad this child to feste;
I may nat tellen euyery circumstance,
Be as be may, ther was he at the leste.
But soth is this, that, at his modres heste,
Biform Alla, during the metes space,
The child stood, loking in the kings face.

This Alla king hath of this child greet wonder,
And to the senatour he seyde anon,
'Whos is that fayre child that stondeth yonder?'
'I noot,' quod he, '[parsay], and by seint John!
A moder he hath, but fader hath he non
That I of wot'—but shortly, in a stounde,
He told Alla how that this child was founde.

Now was this child as lyk vn-to Custance
As possible is a creature to be.
This Alla hath the face in remembrance
Of dame Custance, and ther-on mused he
If that the childes moder were aught she
That was his wyf, and priuely he syghte,
And spedde him fro the table that he myghte.

'Parsay,' thoughte he, 'santome is in my heed!
I oughte deme, of skilful Iugement,
That in the salte see my wyf is deed."
And afterward he madε his argument—
'What wot I, if that Crisf haue 1 hider ysent 2
My wyf by see, as wel as he hir sente
To my contree fro thennes that she wente?'

1 E. haue; the rest hath.
2 E. ysent; Cm. I-sent; the rest sent.
And, after noon, hoom with the senatour
Goth Alla, for to seen this wonder chaunce.
This senatour doth Alla greet honour,
And hastily he sente after Custaunce.
But trusteth wel, hir liste, nat to daunce
When that she wiste wherefor was that sonde.
Vnneth vp-on hir feet she myghte stonde.

Whan Alla sey his wyf, fayre he hir grette,
And weep, that it was rewthe for to see.
For at the firste look he on hir sette
He knew wel verraily that it was she.
And she for sorwe as domb stant as a tre;
So was hir herte shet in hir distresse
Whan she remembred his vnkyndenesse.

Twyes she swowned in his owen syghte;
He weep, and him excuseth pitously:—
'Now god,' quod he, 'and alle his halwes bryghte
So wisly on my soule as haue mercy,
That of your harm as giltelees am I
As is Maurice my sone so lyk your face;
Elles the feend me fecche out of this place!'

Long was the sobbing and the bitter peyne
Er that her woful hertes myghte cesse;
Greet was the pite for to here hem pleyne
Thurgh whiche pleyntes gan her wo encresse.
I prey yow al my labour to relesse;
I may nat telle her wo vn-till tomorwe,
I am so wery for to speke of sorwe.

But fynally, when that the soth is wist
That Alla giltelees was of hir wo,
I trowe an hundred tymes been they kist,
And swich a blisse is ther bitwix hem two
That, saue the Ioye that lasteth euermo,
Ther is noon lyk that any creature
Hath seyn or shal, whyl that the world may dure.

Tho preyde she hir housbond mekely,
In relief of hir longe pitous pyne,
That he wold preye hir fader specially
That, of his magestee, he wolde enclyne
To vouche sauf som day with him to dyne;
She preyde him eek, he sholde by no weye
Vn-to hir fader no word of hir seye.

Som men wold seyn, how that the child Maurice Doth this message vn-to this emperour;
But, as I gesse, Alla was nat so nyce
To him, that was of so souereyn honour
As he that is of cristen folk the flour,
Sente any child, but it is bet to deme
He wente him-self, and so it may wel seme.

This emperour hath graunted gentilly
To come to dyner, as he him bisoughte;
And wel rede I, he loked bisily
Vp-on this child, and on his daughter thoughte.
Alla goth to his in, and, as him oughte,
Arrayed for this feste in euery wyse
As ferforth as his conning may suffyse.

1 So in all the seven MSS. 2 E. wolde; the rest sholde.
The morwe cam, and Alla gan him dresse,
And eek his wyf, this emperour to mete;
And forth they ryde in Ioye and in gladnesse.
And whan she sey hir fader in the strete,
She lyghte doun; and falleth him to fete.
'Fader,' quod she, 'your yonge child Custance
Is now ful clene out of your remembrance.

I am your daughter Custance', quod she,
'That whylom ye han sent vn-to Surrye.
It am I, fader, that in the salte see
Was put allone and damned for to dye.
Now, good fader, mercy I yow crye,
Send me namore vn-to noon hethenesse,
But thonketh my lord heer of his kyndenesse.'

Who can the pitous Ioye tellen al
Bitwix hem thre, sin they ben thus ymette?
But of my tale make an ende I shal;
The day goth faste, I wol no lenger lette.
This glade folk to dyner they hem sette;
In Ioye and blisse at mete I lete hem dwelle
A thousand fold wel more than I can telle.

This child Maurice was sithen emperour
Maad by the pope, and lyued cristenly.
To Cristes chirche he dide gret honoure;
But I lete al his storie passen by,
Of Custance is my tale specially.
In olde Romayn gestes may men fynde
Maurices lyf; I bere it nought in mynde.

\[1\text{ So in all the MSS. ; to be read as Cústancē (three syllables). See the note.}\]
This king Alla, whan he his tyme sey,
With his Custance, his holy wyf so swete,
To Engelond ben they come the ryghte wey,
Wher-as they lyue in Ioye and in quiete.
But litel whyl it lasteth, I yow hete,
Ioye of this world, for tyme wol nat abyde;
Fro day to nyght it changeth as the tyde.

Who lyued euer in swich delyt o day
That him ne moeued other conscience,
Or Ire, or talent, or som kin affray,
Envie, or pryde, or passion, or offence?
I ne sey but for this ende this sentence,
That litel whyl in Ioye or in plesance
Lasteth the blisse of Alla with Custance.

For deth, that taketh of hey and low his rente,
Whan passed was a yeer, euen as I gesse,
Out of this world this king Alla he hente,
For whom Custance hath ful gret heuynesse.
Now lat vs preyen god his soule blesse!
And dame Custance, fynally to seye,
Towards the toun of Rome goth hir weye.

To Rome is come this holy creature,
And fyndeth ther hir frendes hole and sounde:
Now is she scaped al hir aventure;
And whan that she hir fader hath yfounde,
Doun on hir kneës falleth she to grounde;
Weping for tendresesse in herte blythe,
She herieth god an hundred thousand sythe.
In vertu and in holy almes-dede
They lyuen alle, and neuer a-sonder wende;
Til deth departed hem, this lyf they lede.
And fareth now wel, my tale is at an ende.
Now Iesu Crist, that of his myght may sende
Ioye after wo, gouerne vs in his grace,
And kepe vs alle that ben in this place!  Amen.

Heere endeth the tale of the man of Lawe.

Heere folweth the Prologe of the Pardoners Tale.

Radix malorum est Cupiditas: Ad Thimotheum, sexto.

"Radix malorum est Cupiditas."

First I pronounce whennes that I come,
And than my bulles shewe I, alle and somme.
Our lige lorde seel on my patente
That shewe I first, my body to warente,
That no man be so bold, ne preest ne clerk,
Me to destourbe of Cristes holy werk;
And after that than telle I forth my tales,
Bulles of popes and of cardinales,
Of patriarkes, and bishoppes I shewe;
And in Latyn I speke a wordes fewe,
To saffron with my predicacioun,
And for to stire men to devocioun.
Than shewe I forth my longe cristal stones,
Y crammed ful of cloutes and of bones;
Reliks been they, as wenen they echoon.
Than haue I in latoun a shoulder-boon
Which that was of an holy Iewes shepe.
'Good men,' seye I, 'tak of my wordes kepe;
If that this boon be wasshe in any welle,
If cow, or calf, or sheep, or oxe swelle
That any worm hath ete, or worm ystonge,
'Tak water of that welle, and wash his tonge,
And it is hool anon; and furthermore,
Of pokkes and of scabbe, and every sore
Shal every sheep be hool, that of this welle
Drinketh a draughte; tak kepe eek what I telle.
If that the good-man, that the bestes oweth,
Wol every wike, er that the cok him croweth,
Fastinge, drinken of this welle a draughte,
As thilke holy Iewe our eldres taughte,
His bestes and his stoor shal multiplye.
And, sirs\(^1\), also it heleth Ialousye;
For, though a man be falle in Ialous rage,
Let maken with this water his potage,
And neuer shal he more his wyfe mistriste,
Though he the soth of hir defaute wiste.

And I assoille him by the auctoritee
Which that by bulle ygraunted was to me.'

By this gaude haue I wonne, yeer by yere,
An hundred mark sith I was Pardonere.
I stonde lyk a clerk in my pulpet,
And whan the lewed peple is doun yset,
I preche, so as ye haue herd bifore,
And telle an hundred false Iapes more.
Than peyne I me to strecche forth the nekke,
And est and west vpon the peple I bekke,
As doth a dowue sitting on a berne.
Myn hondes and my tonge goon so yerne,
That it is Ioye to se my bisynesse.
Of auarice and of swich cursednesse
Is al my preching, for to make hem fre
To yeue her pens, and namely vn-to me.
For my entent is nat but for to winne,
And no-thing for correccioun of sinne.
I rekke neuer, whan that they ben beryed,
Though that her soules goon a blakeberyed!
For certes, many a predicacioun
Comth ofte tyme of yuel.entencioun;
Som for plesaunce of folk and flaterye,
To been auauenced by ypocrisy,
And som for veyne glorie, and som for hate.
For, whan I dar noon other weyes debate,
Than wol I stinge him with my tongue smerte
In preching, so that he shal nat asterte
To been defamed falsly, if that he Hath trespassed to my brethren or to me.
For, though I telle nought his propre name,
Men shal wel knowe that it is the same

1. E. Hl. hem; the rest him or hym.
2. E. Hl. omit that; the rest have it.
By signes and by othere circumstances.
Thus quyte I folk that doon vs displesances;
Thus spitte I out my venim vnder hewe
Of holynesse, to seme holy and trewe.

But shortly myn entente I wol deuyse;
I preche of no-thing but for coueityse.
Therfor my theme is yet, and euer was—
"Radix malorum est cupiditas."
Thus can I preche agayn that same vice
Which that I vse, and that is auarice.
But, though my-self be gilty in that sinne,
Yet can I maken other folk to twinne
From auarice, and sore to repente.
But that is nat my principal entente.
I preche no-thing but for coueityse;
Of this matere it oughte ynough suffyse.

Than telle I hem ensamples many oon
Of olde stories, longe tyme agoon:
For lewed peple louen tales olde;
Swich thinges can they wel reporte and holde.
What? trowe ye that, whyles 1 I may preche,
And winne gold and siluer for I teche,
That I wol lyue in pouert wilfully?
Nay, nay, I thoughte it neuer trewely!
For I wol preche and begge in sondry londes;
I wol not do no labour with my hondes,
Ne make baskettes, and lyue therby,
Because I wol nat beggen ydelly.
I wol noon of the apostles counterfete;
I wol haue money, wolle, chese, and whete,

1 So Hn.; E. Pt. the whiles; Cm. that whilis that; Cp. Ln. whiles that; Hl. whiles.
Al were it yeuen of the pourest \(^1\) page,
Or of the pourest widwe in a village,
Al sholde hir children sterue for famyne.
Nay! I wol drinke licour of the vyne!

But herkneth, lordings, in conclusioun;
Your lyking is that I shal telle a tale.

Now haue I dronke a draughte of corny ale,
[Parfay], I hope I shal yow telle a thing
That shal, by resoun, been at your lyking.
For, though myself be a ful vicious man,
A moral tale yet I yow telle can,
Which I am wont to preche, for to winne.
Now holde your pees, my tale I wol beginne.

Heere bigynneth the Pardoners tale.

In Flaundres whylom was a companye
Of yonge folk, that haunteden folye,
As ryot, hasard, stewes, and tauernes,
Wher as, with harpes, lutes, and gitemes,
They daunce and pleye at dees bothe day and nyght,
And ete also and drinken ouer her myght,
Thurgh which they doon the deuel sacrificye
With-in that deueneles temple, in cursed wyse,
By superfluitee abhominable;
Her othes been so gret and so damnable,
That it is grisly for to here hem swere;
Our blissed lorde body they to-tere;
Hem thoughte Iewes\(^2\) rente him nought ynough;
And ech of hem at otheres sinne lough.

\(^1\) Hl. prestes.
\(^2\) So Cp. Ln. Hl.; E. Hn. Cm. that Iewes; Pt. pe Iwes.
And ryght anon than comen tombesteres
Fetys and smale, and yonge fruytesteres,
Singers with harpes [eek, and] wafereres,
Whiche been the verray deueles officeres
To kindle and blowe the fyr of [luxurye],
That is annexed vn-to glotonye;
The holy writ take I to my witnesse,
That luxurie is in wyn and dronkenesse.

Herodes (who so wel the stories soughte),
Whan he of wyn was replet at his feste,
Ryght at his owen table he yaf his heste
To sleen the Baptist Iohn ful giltelees.

Senek seith eek a good word doutelees;
He seith he can no difference fynde
Bitwix a man that is out of his mynde
And a man which that is dronkelewe,
But that woodnesse, yfallen in a shrewe,
Perseuereth lenger than doth dronkenesse.
O glotonye, ful of cursednesse,
O cause first of our confusioun,
O original of our dampnacioun,
Til Crist had bought vs with his blood agayn!
Lo, how dere, shortly for to sayn,
Abought was thilke cursed vilanye;
Corrupt was al this world for glotonye!

Adam our fader, and his wyf also,
Fro Paradys to labour and to wo
Were driuen for that vice, it is no drede;
For whyl that Adam fasted, as I rede,

1 E. Hn. Cm. Pt. Hl. agree here; Cp. Ln. have two additional lines, but they are probably spurious.
2 Cp. Ln. eek; the rest omit it.
He was in Paradys; and whan that he Eet of the fruyt defended on the tree,
Anon he was out cast to wo and peyne.
O glotonye, on thee wel oughte vs pleyne!
O, wiste a man how many maladyes
Folwen of excesse and of glotonyes,
He wolde been the more mesurable
Of his diete, sittinge at his table.
Allas! the shorte throte, the tendre mouth,
Maketh that Est and West, and North and South,
In erthe, in eir, in water men¹ to-swinke
To gete a glotoun deyntee mete and drinke!
Of this matere, o Paul, wel canstow tretre,
‘Mete vn-to wombe, and wombe eek vn-to mete,
Shal god destroyen bothe,’ as Paulus seith.
Allas! a foule thing is it, by my feith,
To seye this word, and fouler is the dede,
Whan man so drinketh of the whyte and rede,
That of his throte he maketh his pryuee,
Thurgh thilke cursed superfluitee.

The apostel weping seith ful pitously,
‘Ther walken many of whiche yow told haue I,
I seye it now weping with pitous voyes,
That thai² been enemys of Cristes croys,
Of whiche the ende is deth, wombe is her god.’

How gret labour and cost is thee to fynde!
Thise cokes, how they stampe, and streyne, and grynde,
And turnen substaunce in-to accident,
To fulfille al thy likerous talent!

² That thai is Tyrwhitt's reading; Hi. Thay; but the rest have Ther, probably repeated by mistake from l. 530.
Out of the harde bones knokke they
The mary, for they caste nought a-vey
That may go thurgh the golet softe and swote;
Of spicerye, of leef, and bark, and rote
Shal been his sauce ymaked by delyt,
To make him yet a newer appetyt.
But certes, he that haunteth swich delices
Is deed, whyl that he lyueth in tho vices.

A [cursed] thing is wyn, and dronkenesse
Is ful of stryuing and of wrecchednesse.
O dronke man, disfigured is thy face,
Sour is thy breeth, foul artow to embrace,
And thurgh thy dronke nose semeth the soun
As though thou seydest ay 'Sampsoun, Sampsoun';
And yet, god wot, Sampsoun drank neuer no wyn.
Thou fallest, as it were a stiked swyn,
Thy tonge is lost, and al thyn honest cure;
For dronkenesse is verray sepulture
Of mannes wit and his discrecioun.
In whom that drinke hath dominacioun,
He can no conseil kepe, it is no drede.
Now kepe yow fro the whyte and fro the rede,
And namely fro the whyte wyn of Lepe,
That is to selle in Fishstrete or in Chepe.
This wyn of Spayne crepeth subtilly
In othere wynes, growing faste by,
Of which ther ryseth swich fumositee,
That whan a man hath dronken draughtes thre,
And weneth that he be at hoom in Chepe,
He is in Spayne, ryght at the toune of Lepe,
Nat at the Rochel, ne at Burdeux toun;
And thanne wol he seye, 'Sampsoun, Sampsoun.'
But herkneth, lordings¹, o word, I yow preye,
That alle the souereyn actes, dar I seye,
Of victories in the olde testament,
Thurgh verry god, that is omnipotent,
Were doon in abstinence and in preyere;
Loketh the Bible, and ther ye may it lere.

Loke, Attila, the grete conquerour,
Deyde in his sleep, with shame and dishonour,
Bledinge ay at his nose in dronkenesse;
A capitayn shoulde lyue in sobrenesse.
And ouer al this, ayseth yow ryght wel
What was commaund vn-to Lamuel—
Nat Samuel, but Lamuel, seye I—
Redeth the Bible, and fynde it expresly
Of wyn yeuing to hem that han Iustise;
Namore of this, for it may wel suffise.

And now that ² I haue spoke of glotonye,
Now wol I yow defenden hasardrye.
Hasard is verry moder of lesinges,
And of deceit, and cursed forsweringes,
Blaspheme³ of Crist, manslaughtre, and wast also
Of catel and of tyme; and forthermo,
It is repreue and contrarie of honour
For to ben holde a commune hasardour.
And euer-the heyer he is of estaat,
The more is he holden desolaat.
If that a prince vseth hasardrye,
In alle gouernaunce and policye
He is, as by commune opinoun,
Yholde the lasse in reputacioun.

² E. omitis that; the rest have it.
³ E. Blasphemyng; the rest Blasphem.
Stilbon, that was a wys embassadour,
Was sent to Corinthe, in ful greet honour,
Fro Lacidomie, to make her alliaunce.
And whan he cam, him happede, par chaunce,
That alle the grettest that were of that lond, Pleyinge atte hasard he hem fond.
For which, as sone as it myghte be,
He stal him hoom agayn to his contree,
And seyde, 'ther wol I nat lese my name ;
Ne I wol nat take on me so great defame,
Yow for to allye vn-to none hasardours.
Sendeth som othere wyse embassadours ;
For, by my trouthe, me were leuer dye,
Than I yow sholde to hasardours alye.
For ye that been so glorious in honours
Shul nat allyen yow with hasardours
As by my wil, ne as by my tretee.'
This wyse philosophre thus seyde he.

Loke eek that to the king Demetrius
The king of Parthes, as the book seith vs,
Sente him a paire of dees of gold in scorn,
For he hadde vsed hasard ther-bifor;
For which he heeld his glorie or his renoun
At no value or reputacioun.
Lordes may fynden other maner pley
Honeste ynough to dryue the day awey.

Now wol I speke of othes false and grete
A word or two, as olde bokes trete.
Gret swering is a thing abominable,
And fals swering is yet more repreuable.

1 Hn. Ny; Cm. Nay (both put for Ne I) which shews the scansion.

The heye god forbad swering at al,
Witnesse on Mathew; but in special
Of swering seith the holy Ieremye,
‘Thou shalt seye sooth thyn othes, and nat lye,
And swere in dome, and eek in ryghtwisnesse;’
But ydel swering is a cursednesse.
Bihold and se, that in the firste table
Of heye goddes hesTes honurable,
How that the seconde heste of him is this—‘Tak nat my. name in ydel or amis.’
Lo, rather he forbedeth swich swering
Than homicyde or many a cursed thing;
I sey that, as by ordre, thus it stondeth;
This knowen, that his hestes vnderstondeth,
How that the second heste of god is that.
And forther ouer, I wol thee telle al plat,
That vengeanceshal nat parten from his hous,
That of his othes is to outrageous.
‘By goddes precious herte, and by his nayles,
And by the blode of Crist, that it is in Hayles,
Seuen is my chaunce, and thyng cink and treye;
By goddes armes, if thou falsly pleye,
This dagger shall thurgh-out thyn herte go’—
This fruyt cometh of the bicched bones two,
Forswering, ire, falsnesse, homicyde.
Now, for the loue of Crist that for vs dyde,
Leueth your othes, bothe grete and smale;

Thus taughte me my dame, I sey namore.'
'By seinte Marie,' seyde this tauerner,
'The child seith sooth, for he hath slayn this yeer,
Henne ouer a myle, with-in a greet village,
Both man and womman, child and hyne, and page.
I trowe his habitacioun be there;

And we wol sleen this false traytour deeth;
He shal be slayn, which that so many sleeth,
By goddes dignitee, er it be nyght.'

And vp they sterte al\(^2\) dronken, in this rage,
And forth they goon towards that village,
Of which the tauerner had spoke bisorn,
And many a grisly ooth than han they sworn,
And Cristes blessed body they to-rente—
'Deeth shal be deed, if that they may him hente.'

Whan they han goon nat fully half a myle,
Ryght as they wolde han troden ouer a style,
An old man and a poure with hem mette.
This olde man ful mekely hem grette,
And seyde thus, 'now, lordes, god yow see!'

The proudest of thise ryotoures three Answerde agayn, 'what? carl, with sory grace,
Why artow al forwrapped saue thy face?
Why lyuestow so longe in so greet age?'

This olde man gan loke in his visage,
And seyde thus, 'for I ne can nat fynde

Ne deeth, alIas! ne wol nat han my lyf;
Thus walke I, lyk a restees caityf,
And on the ground, which is my modres gate,
I knokke with my staf, bothe erly and late,
And seye, "leue moder, leet me in!
Lo, how I vanish, flesh, and blood, and skin!
Allas! whan shul my bones been at reste?
Moder, with yow wolde I chaungen my cheste,
That in my chambre longe tyme hath be,
Ye! for an heyre clowt to wrappe me!"
But yet to me she wol nat do that grace,
For which ful pale and welked is my face.
But, sirs, to yow it is no curteisy
To speken to an old man vilanye,
But he trespasse in worde, or elles in dede.
In holy writ ye may your-self wel rede,
"Agayns an old man, hoor vpon his heed,
Ye sholde aryse," wherfor I yeue yow reed,
Ne doth vn-to an old man noon harm now,
No more than¹ ye wolde men dide to yow
In age, if that ye so longe abyde;
And god be with yow, wher ye go or ryde.
I mot go thider as I haue to go.'
'Nay, olde cherl, by god, thou shalt nat so,' Seyde this other hasardour anon,
'Thou partest nat so lyghtly, by seint Iohn!

For soothly thou art oon of his assent,
To sleen vs yonge folk, thou false theef!'
'Now, sirs,' quod he, 'if that yow be so leef
To fynde deeth, turne vp this croked wey,
For in that groue I lafte him, by my fey,
Vnder a tree, and ther he wol abyde;
Nat for your bost he wol him no-thing hyde.
Se ye that ook? ryght ther ye shul him fynde.
God saue yow, that boughte agayn mankynde,
And yow amende!'—thus seyde this olde man.
And euerich of thise ryotoures ran,
Til he cam to that tree, and ther they founde
Of florins fyne of golde ycoyned rounde
Wel ny an eighte bussheles, as hem thoughte.
No lenger thanne after deeth they soughte,
But ech of hem so glad was of that syghte,
For that the florins been so fayre and bryghte,
That doun they sette hem by this precious hord.
The worste of hem he spake the firste word.
'Brethren,' quod he, 'tak kepe what I seye;
My wit is greet, though that I bourde and pleye.
This tresor hath fortune vn-to vs yeuen,
In mirthe and Iolitee our lyf to lyuen,
And lyghtly as it comth, so wol we spende.

By oon assent, wher as vs thinketh best.'
That oon of hem the cut broughte in his fest,
And bad him drawe, and loke wher it wolde\(^2\) falle;
And it fil on the youngest of hem alle;
And forth toward the toun he wente anon.
And al so sone as that he was gon,
That oon of hem\(^3\) spak thus vn-to that other,
'Thou knowest wel thou art my sworn\(^4\) brother,

The prologue of the Seconde Nonnes tale.

THE ministre and the norice vn-to vices,
Which that men clepe in English ydelenesse,
That porter of the gate is of delicês,
To eschue, and by hir contrarie hir oppresse,
That is to seyn, by leueful bisinesse,
Wel oughten we to doon al our entente,
Lest that the sefend thurgh ydelenesse vs hente.

For he, that with his thousand cordes slye
Continuely vs waiteth to biclappe,
Whan he may man in ydelenesse espye,
He can so lyghtly cacche him in his trappe,
Til that a man be hent ryght by the lappe,
He nis nat war the sefend hath him in honde;
Wel oughte vs werche, and ydelenes withstonde.

And though men dradden neuer for to dye,
Yet seen men wel by resoun doutelees,
That ydelenesse is roten ² slogardye,
Of which ther neuer comth no good encrees ³;
And seen, that slouthe hir ⁴ holdeth in a lees

_Inuocacio ad Mariam._

And thou that flour of virgines art alle,
Of whom that Bernard list so wel to wryte,
To thee at my begining first I calle;
Thou comfort of vs wreches, do me endyte³
Thy maydens deeth, that wan thurgh hir meryte
The eternal lyf, and of the feend victorie,
As man may after rede in hir storie.

Thou mayde and moder, daughter of thy sone,
Thou welle of mercy, sinful soules cure,
In whom that god, for bountee, chees to wonne,
Thou humble, and hey ouer euery creature,
Thou nobledest so serforth our nature,
That no desdeyn the maker hadde of kynde,
His sone in blode and flesshe to clothe and wynde.

Withinne the cloistre blissful of thy sydes
Took mannes shap the eternal loue and pees,
That of the(tryne compas)lord and gyde is,
Whom erthe and see and heuen, out of relees,
Ay herien; and thou, virgin wemmeless,

Bar of thy body, and dweltest mayden pure,
The creatour of euery creature.

Assembled is in thee magnificence
With mercy, goodnesse, and with swich pitee
That thou, that art the sonne of excellence,
Nat only helpest hem that prayen thee,
But ofte tyme, of thy benignitee,
Ful frely, er that men thyn help biseche,
Thou goost biforn, and art her lyues leche.

Now help, thou meke and blisful fayre mayde,
Me, flemed wrecche, in this desert of galle;
Think on the womman Cananee, that sayde
That whelpes eten somme of the crommes alle
That from her lorde table been ysalle;
And though that I, vnworthy sone of Eue,
Be sinful, yet accepte my bileue.

That I be quit fro thennes that most derk is!
O thou, that art so fayr and ful of grace,
Be myn aduocat in that heye place
Ther as withouten ende is songe 'Osanne,' Thou Cristes moder, daughter dere of Anne!

And of thy lyght my soule in prison lyghte,
That troubled is by the contagioun
Of my body, and also by the wyghte
Of erthly luste and fals affeccioun;
O hauen of refut, o saluacioun
Of hem that been in sorwe and in distresse,
Now help, for to my werk I wol me dresse.
Yet preye I yow that reden that I wryte,

The storie wroot, and folwe hir legende,
And prey yow, that ye wol my werk amende.

[THE PROEM.]

Interpretacio nominis Cecilie, quam ponit frater Iacobus Iauuenensis in legenda.

First wolde I yow the name of seint Cecilie Expoune, as men may in hir storie see,
It is to seye in english 'heuenes lilie,'
For pure chastnesse of virginitee;
Or, for she whytnesse hadde of honestee,
And grene of conscience, and of good fame
The sote savour, 'lilie' was hir name.

Or Cecile is to seye 'the wey to blynde,'
For she ensample was by good techinge;
Or elles Cecile, as I writen fynde,
Is ioyned, by a manere conjoyninge
Of 'heuene' and 'lia'; and heer, in figuringe,
The 'heuen' is set for thought of holinesse,
And 'lia' for hir lasting bisinesse.

1 Hn. tendite (shewing the scansion).
3 Cm. folwe; E. Hn. Hl. folwen; Cp. Pt. Ln. folowen.
4 E. I pray; Cp. And pray I; the rest And pray (or prei, or preye).
5 E. omits yow; the rest retain it.
6 E. favour; the rest savour; see l. 229.
Cecile may eek be seyd in this manere,
‘Wanting of blyndnesse,’ for hir grete lyghte
Of sapience, and for hir thewes clere ;
Or elles, lo! this maydens name bryghte
Of ‘heuene’ and ‘leos’ comth, for which by ryghte
Men myghte hir wel ‘the heuen of peple’ calle, Ensample of gode and wyse werkes alle.

For ‘leos’ ‘peple’ in english is to seye,
And ryght as men may in the heuene see
The sonne and mone and sterres euery weye,
Ryght so men gostly, in this mayden free,
Seyen of feith the magnanimitie,
And eek the cleernesse hool of sapience,
And sondry werkes, bryghte of excellence.

And ryght so as thise philosophres wryte
That heuen is swift and round and eek brenninge, Ryght so was fayre Cecilie the whyte
Ful swift and busy euer in good werkinge,
And round and hool in good perseueringe,
And brenning euer in charite ful bryghte ;
Now haue I yow declared what she hyghte.

Explicit.

Here bigynneth the Seconde Nonnes tale, of the lyf of Seinte Cecile.

This mayden bryght Cecile, as hir lyf seith,
Was comen of Romayns, and of noble kynde,
And from hir cradel vp fostred in the feith
Of Crist, and bar his gospel in hir mynde;
She neuer cessed, as I writen fynde,
Of hir preyere, and god to loue and drede,
Biseking him to kepe hir maydenhede.

And whan this mayden sholde vnto a man
Ywedded be, that was ful yong of age,
Which that ycleped was Valerian,
And day was comen of hir mariage,
She, ful devout and humble in hir corage,
Vnder hir robe of gold, that sat ful fayre,
Had next hir flesshe yclad hir in an heyre.

And whyl the organs \(^1\) maden melodye,
To god alone in herte thus sang she;
'O lord, my soule and eek my body gye
Unwemmed, lest that I \(^2\) confounded be:'
And, for his loue that deyde vpon a tree,
Euery seconde or \(^3\) thridde day she faste,
Ay biddinge in hir orisons ful faste.

[The tyme is comen, whan she moste] gon
With hir housbonde, as ofte is the manere,
And priuely to him she seyde anon,
'O swete and wel biloued spouse dere,
Ther is a conseil, and ye wolde it here,
Which that ryght fayn-I wolde vnto yow seye,
So that ye swere ye shul me \(^4\) nat biwreye.'

Valerian gan faste vnto hir swere,
That for no cas, ne thing that myghte be,
He sholde neuer mo biwreyen here;

Valerian, corrected as god wolde,
Answerde agayn, ‘if I shal trusten thee,
Lat me that angel se, and him biholde;
And if that it a verray angel be,
Than wol I doon as thou hast preyed me;
And if thou loue another man, for sothe
Ryght with this swerd than wol I sle yow bothe.’

Cecile answerde anon ryght in this wyse,

Solempnely this noble doctour dere
Commendeth it², and seith in this manere:

The palm of martirdom for to receyue,
Seint Cecilie, fulfild of goddes yifte,
The world and eek hir chambre gan she weyue;
Witness Tyburces and Valerians³ shrifte,
To whiche god of his bountee wolde shifte
Corones two of floures wel smellinge,
And made his angel hem the corones bringe:

The mayde hath broght thise⁴ men to blisse aboue;
The world hath wist what it is worth, certeyn,
Deuocioun of chastitee to loue.—
Tho shewede him Cecile al⁵ open and pleyn
That alle ydoles nis but a thing in veyn;
For they been dombe, and therto they been deue,
And charged him his ydoles for to leue.

'Through so that troweth nat this, a beste he is,'
Quod tho Tiburce, 'if that I shal nat lye.'
And she gan kisse his brest, that herde this,
And was ful glad he coude trouthe espye.
'This day I take thee for myn allye,' Seyde this blisful fayre mayde dere;
And after that she seyde as ye may here:

Him-self he weep, for pitee that he hadde.

Whan Maximus had herd the seintes lore,
He gat him of the tormentoures leue,
And ladde hem to his hous withoute more;
And with her preching, er that it were eue,
They gonnen fro the tormentours to reue,

And whan this thing was seyd as I deuyse,
Men ladde hem forth to doon the sacrificye.

But whan they weren to the place brought,
To tellen shortly the conclusioun,
They nolde encense ne sacrifice ryght nought,
But on hir knees they setten hem adoun
With humble herte and sad deuocioun,
And losten bothe hir hedes in the place.
Hir soules wenten to the king of grace,

This Maximus, that sey this thing bityde,
With pitous teres tolde it anon ryght,
That he her soules sey to heuen glyde

By Tiburce and Valerian softly,
Withinne hir burying-place, vnder the stoon.
And after this Almachius hastily Bad his ministres fecchen openly
Cecile, so that she myghte in his presence
Doon sacrifice, and Iupiter encense.

GROUP G. THE CANON’S YEOMAN’S TALE.

The prologe of the Chanons yemannes tali.

Whan ended was the lyf of seint Cecile,
Er we had ridden fully fyue myle, 555
At Boughton vnder Blee vs gan atake
A man, that clothed was in clothes blake,
And vndernethe he wered a surplys. 2
His hakeney, that was al pomely grys,
So swatte, that it wonder was to see;
It semed he had priked myles three. 560
The hors eek that his yeman rood vpon
So swatte, that vnnethe myghte it gon.
Aboute the peytrel stood the foom ful hye,
He was of sone al flekked as a pye. 565
A male tweyfold on his croper lay,
It semed that he caried lyt array.
Al lyght for somer rood this worthy man,
And in myn herte wondren I bigan
What that he was, til that I vnderstood
How that his cloke was sowed to his hood;
For which, when I had longe auysed me,
I demede him som chanon for to be.

For he had riden more than trot or paas;
He had ay priked lyk as he were wood.
A clote-leef he hadde vnder his hood
For swote, and for to kepe his heed from hete.
But it was ioye for to seen him swete!
His forhed dropped as a stillatorie,
Were ful of plantayn and of paritorie.
And whan that he was come, he gan to crye,
‘God saue,’ quod he, ‘this ioly companye!
Faste haue I priked,’ quod he, ‘for your sake,
By cause that I wolde yow atake,
To ryden in this mery companye.’
His yeman eek was ful of curteisye,
And seyde, ‘sirs, now in the morwe tyde
Out of your hostelrye I sey you ryde,
And warned heer my lord and my souerayn,
Which that to ryden with yow is ful fayn,
For his desport; he loueth daliaunce.’
   ‘Frend, for thy warning god yeue thee good chaunce,’
Than seyde our host, ‘for certes, it wolde seme

Er than the pot be on the fyr ydo,
Of metals with a certeyn quantite,
My lord hem tempreth, and no man but he—
Now he is goon, I dar seyn boldely—
For, as men seyn, he can doon craftily;
Algate I wot wel he hath swich a name,
And yet ful ofte he renneth in a blame;
And wite ye how? ful ofte it happeth so,
The pot tobreketh, and farewell! al is go!
Thise metals been of so greet violence,

In London was a preest, an an annueleer,
That therin dwelleth many a yeer,

And at my day I wol it quyten thee.
And if so be that thou me fynde fals,
Another day do hange me by the hals!’

This preest him took a mark, and that as swythe,
And this chanoun him thanked ofte sithe,
And took his leue, and wente forth his weye,
And at the thridde day broughte his moneye,
And to the preest he took his gold agayn,
Wherof this preest was wonder glad and fayn.

‘Certes,’ quod he, ‘no thing anoyeth me

Is ther any coper her-inne?' seyde he.
'Ye,' quod the preest, 'sir, I trowe wel ther be.'
'Elles go by vs som, and that as swythe,
Now, gode sir, go forth thy wey and hy the.'

He wente his wey, and with the coper cam,
And this chanoun it in his hondes nam,
And of that coper weyed out but an ounce.
Al to simple is my tonge to pronounce,
As ministre of my wit, the doublenesse
Of this chanoun, rote of al cursednesse.
He semed frendly to hem that knewe him nought,
But he was feendly bothe in herte and thought.

And in the water rombled to and fro,
And wonder priuely took vp also
The coper teyne, nought knowing this preest,

NOTES.

THE TALE OF THE MAN OF LAWSE (GROUP B).

A story, agreeing closely with The Man of Lawes Tale, is found in Book II. of Gower's Confessio Amantis, from which Tyrwhitt supposed that Chaucer borrowed it. But I have shewn, in the Preface, that Gower's version is later than Chaucer's, and that Chaucer and Gower were both alike indebted to the version of the story in French prose (by Nicholas Trivet) in MS. Arundel 56, printed for the Chaucer Society in 1872. In some places Chaucer agrees with this French version rather closely, but he makes variations and additions at pleasure.

The first ninety-eight lines of the preceding Prologue are written in couplets, in order to link the Tale to the others of the series; but there is nothing to show which of the other tales it was intended to follow. Next follows a more special Prologue of thirty-five lines, in five stanzas of seven lines each; so that the first line in the Tale is l. 134 of Group B, the second of the fragments into which the Canterbury Tales are broken up, owing to the incomplete state in which Chaucer left them.

Wherever a final e occurs, it is, in general, to be pronounced as a distinct syllable, unless elided before a vowel or h following. In like manner -es and -ed generally form distinct syllables. There are, in general, sufficient reasons for the full pronunciation of these final syllables, but these cannot here be stated. The reader is referred to Morris's edition of Chaucer's Prologue and Knightes Tale (Clarendon Press Series), p. xlv. and to the Preface to my edition of The Prioresses Tale, pp. xlvii.,-lxxii. for general rules; and to Ellis's Early English Pronunciation for a full discussion of the subject. In the first stanza, for example, the word trewe is dissyllabic, being plural: hewe is so, because it is a dative case governed by the prep. of, which formerly governed a dative, though now associated with the idea of a possessive case; newe is so, because modified from the A. S. dissyllabic niwe. Chaiffare (l. 139) is a gerund, and gerunds are commonly marked by the termination -e or -en (A. S. -anne). Ware is dissyllabic, being the A. S. ware. Sometimes an e is sounded in the middle of a word, as in wydewher (three syllables). Observe also clothès (A.S. clásas). In some French words, such as company, the pronunciation of the e final is less certain, and seems to partake of poetic license; yet there is nothing very remarkable in the assumption, since the same word contains four syllables to this day, and is accented on the penultimate, both in Spanish and Italian; cf. Span. compaúía and Ital. compagnia. Again, such words as grace, space, from the Latin gratiam, spatium, may fairly be allowed two syllables; especially when we find cause (Lat. causam) with two syllables; Cant. Tales, 4142, 5705. If, however, the final e be followed by a vowel, or (in some cases) by the letter h, it is elided, or, to speak more strictly, slurred over by rapid pronunciation. This is the case in the words dwellte (134), riche, sadde (135), and riche again (137). Chaucer’s lines, if read with attention, are beautifully melodious.

Line 134. Surrye, Syria; called Sarazine (Saracen-land) by N. Trivet.

1. 143. Were it, whether it were.

1. 144. Message, messenger, not message; see l. 333, and the note.

1. 145. The final e in Rome is pronounced, as in l. 142; but the words the ende are to be run together, forming but one syllable, thende, according to Chaucer’s usual practice; cf. note to l. 255. Indeed, in l. 423, it is actually so spelt; just as, in l. 150, we have the excellent, and in l. 151, themperoures.

1. 151. Themperoures, the emperor’s. Gower calls him Tiberius Constantine, who was Emperor (not of Rome, but) of the East, a.d. 578, and was succeeded, as in the story, by Maurice, a.d. 582. His capital was Constantinople, whither merchants from Syria could easily repair; but the greater fame of Rome caused the substitution of the Western for the Eastern capital.

1. 156. God him see, God protect him. See note to C. 715.

1. 166. Mirour, mirror. Such French words are frequently accented on the last syllable. Cf. ministr’ in l. 168.

1. 171. Han doon fraught, have caused to be freighted. All the MSS. have fraught, not fraughte. In the Glossary to Specimens of English, I marked fraught as being the infinitive mood, as Dr. Stratmann supposes, though he notes the lack of the final e. I have now no doubt that fraught is nothing but the past participle, as in William of Palerne, l. 2732—which is said of a ship. The use of this past participle after a perfect tense is a most remarkable idiom, but there is no doubt about its occurrence in the Clerkes Tale, Group E. 1098, where we find ‘Hath doon yow kept,’ where Tyrwhitt has altered kept to kepe. On the other hand, Tyrwhitt actually notes the occurrence of ‘Hath doon wrought’ in Kn. Tale, 1055, which he calls an irregularity. A better name for it is idiom. I find similar instances of it in another author of the same period.

‘And feithliche fraught ful of fine wines,’

THE TALE OF THE MAN OF LAWE.

‘Thai strak his hed of, and syne it
Thai haf gert saltit in-til a kyt.’

Barbour’s Bruce, ed. Skent. xviii. 167.

I. e. they have caused it (to be) salted. And again in the same, bk. viii. l. 13, we have the expression He gert held, as if ‘he caused to be held;’ but it may mean ‘he caused to incline.’ Compare also the following:—

‘And thai sall let thame trumpit ill;’ id. xix. 712.

I.e. and they shall consider themselves as evilly deceived.

The infinitive appears to have been fraughten, though the earliest certain examples of this form seem to be those in Shakespeare, Cymb. i. 1. 126, Temp. i. 2. 13. The proper form of the pp. was fraught (as in Marlowe, 2 Tamb. i. 2. 33), but the loss of final -ed in past participles of verbs of which the stem ends in t is common; cf. set, put, &c. Hence this form fraught as a pp. in the present instance. It is a Scandinavian word, from Swed. frakta, Dan. fragte. At a later period we find freight, the mod. E. form. The vowel-change is due to the fact that there was an intermediate form fret, borrowed from the French form fret of the Scandinavian word. This form fret disturbed the vowel-sound, without wholly destroying the recollection of the original guttural gh, due to the Swed. k. For an example of fret, we have only to consult the old black-letter editions of Chaucer printed in 1532 and 1561, which give us the present line in the form—‘These marchantes han don fret her ships new.’

l. 185. Ceriously, with great minuteness of detail. Used by Fabian, who says that ‘to reherce ceryously’ all the conquests of Henry V would fill a volume; Chron., ed. Ellis, p. 589. It is the Low Latin seriose, used in two senses; (1) seriously, gravely; (2) minutely, fully. In the latter case it is perhaps to be referred to the Lat. series, not serius. A similar word, cerealy (Lat. seriatis), is found three times in the Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, with the sense of in due order.

l. 190. This refers to the old belief in astrology and the casting of nativities. Cf. Prol. 414–418.

l. 197. Tyrwhitt shews that this stanza is imitated closely from some Latin lines, some of which are quoted in the margin of many MSS. of Chaucer. He quotes them at length from the Megacosmos of Bernardus Silvestris, a poet of the twelfth century (extant in MS. Bodley 1265). The lines are as follows, it being premised that those printed in italics are cited in the margin of MSS. E. Hn. Cp. Pt. and Ln.:—

‘Præiæcit in stellis series, quam longior ætas
Explicit et spatiis temporis ordo suis,
Sceptra Phoronei, fratrum discordia Thebis,
Flamma Phaethontis, Deucalonis ago.
In stellis Codri paupertas, copia Croesi,
Incestus Paridis, Hippolytique pudor.'
In stellis Priami species, audacia Turni, Sensus Ulixex, Herculeusque vigor.
In stellis pugil est Pollux et nauita Typhis,
Et Cicero rhetor et geometra Thales.
In stellis lepidum dictat Maro, Milo figurat, Fulgurat in Latia nobilitate Nero.
Astra notat Persis, Α'γυπτus parturit artes,
Græcia docta legit, prælia Roma gerit.'

The names Ector (Hector), &c. are too well known to require comment. The death of Turnus is told at the end of Virgil’s Æneid.

1. 207, 208. Here haue seems to be used as the form of the auxiliary verb, whilst han (for hauen) signifies possession. See han again in l. 241.

1. 224. Mahoun, Mahomet. The French version does not mention Mahomet. This is an anachronism on Chaucer’s part; the Emperor Tiberius II died A.D. 582, when Mahomet was but twelve years old.

1. 228. I pray you holde, I pray you to hold. Here holde is the infinitive mood. The imperative plural would be holdeth; see saueth, next line.

1. 236. Maumettreve, idolatry; from the Mid. E. maunet, an idol, corrupted from Mahomet. The confusion introduced by using the word Mahomet for an idol may partly account for the anachronism in l. 224. The Mahometans were falsely supposed by our forefathers to be idolaters.

1. 242. Not, put for ne wot, know not.

1. 248. An imperfect line. There are a few such lines in Chaucer, in which the cæsural pause seems to count for a syllable. Scan it thus:—

That them | perour || — of | his grei | noblesse ||

Again, l. 621 below may be read in a similar manner:—

But na | theles || — ther | was grei | moorning ||

1. 253. ‘So, when Ethelbert married Bertha, daughter of the Christian King Charibert, she brought with her, to the court of her husband, a Gallican bishop named Leudhard, who was permitted to celebrate mass in the ancient British Church of St. Martin, at Canterbury.’ Note in Bell’s Chaucer.

1. 255. Know, being plural, may take a final e; we should then read th’ende, as explained in note to l. 145. The pl. inoʒhe occurs in the Ormulum.

1. 263. Alle and some, collectively and individually; one and all. See Cler. Tale, E. 941.

1. 277. The word alle, being plural, is dissyllabic. Thing is often a plural form, being an A.S. neuter noun. The words ouer, euier, neuer are, in Chaucer, generally monosyllables, or nearly so; just as o’er, e’er, ne’er are treated as monosyllables by our poets in general. Hence the scansion is—‘O’er al | lë thing | ’, &c.

1. 289. The word at is inserted from the Cambridge MS.; all the other six MSS. omit it, which makes the passage one of extreme difficulty. Tyrwhitt reads 'Or Ylion brent, or Thebes the citee.' Of course he means brende, past tense, not brent, the past participle; and his conjecture amounts to inserting or before Thebes. It is better to insert at, as proposed by Mr. Gilman. The sense is—'When Pyrrhus broke the wall, before Ilium burnt, (nor) at the city of Thebes, nor at Rome,' &c. Tyrwhitt well observes that 'Thebes the citee' is a French phrase. He quotes 'dedans Renes la cite,' Froissart, v. i.
c. 225.

1. 295. In the margin of the Ellesmere MS. is written-'Vnde Pthole-meus, libro i. cap. 8. Primi motus celi duo sunt, quorum vnus est qui mouet totum semper ab Oriente in Occidentem vno modo super orbes, &c. Item aliter vero motus est qui mouet orbem stellarum currencium contra motum primum, videlicet, ab Occidente in Orientem super alios duos polos.' The old astronomy imagined nine spheres revolving round the central stationary earth; of the seven innermost, each carried with it one of the seven planets, viz. the Moon, Venus. Mercury, Sun, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn; the eighth sphere, that of the fixed stars, had a slow motion from west to east, to account for the precession of the equinoxes, whilst the ninth or outermost sphere, called the primum mobile, or the sphere of first motion, had a diurnal revolution from east to west, carrying everything with it. This exactly corresponds with Chaucer's language. He addresses the outermost sphere or primum mobile (which is the ninth if reckoning from within, but the first from without), and accuses it of carrying with it everything in its irresistible westward motion; a motion contrary to that of the 'natural' motion, viz. that in which the sun advances along the signs of the zodiac. The result was that the evil influence of the planet Mars prevented the marriage. It is clear that Chaucer was thinking of certain passages in Boethius, as will appear from consulting his own translation of Boethius, ed. Morris, pp. 21, 22, 106, and 110. I quote a few lines to shew this:—

'O thou maker of the whole that berep the sterres, whiche that art fastned to the perdurable chayere, and turnest theheuene wiþ a rauyssyng sweighe, and constreinest the sterres to suffren the lawe;' pp. 21, 22.

'he regioun of the fire that eschauis by the swifte moeyung of the firmament;' p. 110.
The original is—
'O stelliferi conditor orbis
Qui perpetuo nixus solio
Rapidum caelum turbine uersas,
Legemque pati sidera cogis,' Boeth. Cons. Phil. lib. i. met. 5.

'Quique agili motu calet ætheris;' id. lib. iv. met. 1.
Compare also the following passage:

‘The earth, in roundness of a perfect ball,
Which as a point but of this mighty all
Wise Nature fixed, that permanent doth stay,
Whereas the spheres by a diurnal sway
Of the first Mover carried are about.’

Drayton: The Man in the Moon.

1. 299. Crowding, pushing. This is still a familiar word in East Anglia. Forby, in his Glossary of the East Anglian Dialect, says—

‘Crowd, v. to push, shove, or press close. To the word, in its common acceptation, number seems necessary. With us, one individual can crowd another.’ To crowd a wheelbarrow means to push it. The expression ‘crod in a barwe,’ i.e. wheeled or pushed along in a wheelbarrow, occurs in the Paston Letters, a.d. 1477, ed. Gairdner, iii. 215.

1. 302. A planet is said to ascend directly, when in a direct sign; but tortuously, when in a tortuous sign. The tortuous signs are those which ascend most obliquely to the horizon, viz. the signs from Capricornus to Gemini inclusive. Chaucer tells us this himself; see his Treatise on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, part ii. sect. 28. The most ‘tortuous’ of these are the two middle ones, Pisces and Aries. Of these two, Aries is called the mansion of Mars, and we may perhaps suppose the ascending sign to be Aries, the lord of which (Mars) is said to have fallen ‘from his angle into the darkest house.’ The words ‘angle’ and ‘house’ are used technically. The whole sphere was divided into twelve equal parts, or ‘houses.’ Of these, four were termed ‘angles,’ four others ‘succedents,’ and the rest ‘cadents.’ It appears that Mars was not then situate in an ‘angle’ or lucky ‘house,’ but in the unluckiest of the four ‘cadent houses,’ and so in the darkest house of all. See the explanation in Chaucer’s Astrolabe, ed. Skeat; pref. p. lii.

1. 305. The meaning of Atazir has long remained undiscovered. But by the kind help of Mr. Bensly, one of the sub-librarians of the Cambridge University Library, I am enabled to explain it. Atazir or atacir is the Spanish spelling of the Arabic al-tasir, influence, given at p. 351 of Richardson’s Pers. Dict., ed. 1829. It is a noun derived from asara, a verb of the second conjugation, meaning to leave a mark on, from the substantive asar, a mark; the latter substantive is given at p. 20 of the same work. Its use in astrology is commented upon by Dozy, who gives it in the form atacir, in his Glossaire des Mots Espagnols dérivés de l’Arabique, p. 207. It signifies the influence of a star or planet upon other stars, or upon the fortunes of men. In the present case it is clearly used in a bad sense; we may therefore translate it by ‘evil influence.’ On this common deterioration in the meaning of words, see Trench, Study of Words, p. 52. The word craft, for example, is a very similar instance; it originally meant skill, and hence, a trade, and we find star-craft used in particular to signify the science of astronomy.

I. 307. ‘Thou art in conjunction in an unfavourable position; from the position in which thou wast favourably placed thou art moved away.’

I. 312. ‘Is there no choice as to when to fix the voyage?’ The favourable moment for commencing a voyage was one of the points on which it was considered desirable to have an astrologer’s opinion. Travelling, at that time, was a serious matter. Yet this was only one of the many undertakings which required, as was thought, to be begun at a favourable moment. Whole books were written on ‘elections,’ i.e. favourable times for commencing operations of all kinds. Chaucer was thinking, in particular, of the following passage, which is written in the margins of the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. ‘Omnes concordati sunt quod elecciones sint debiles nisi in diuitibus: habent enim isti, licet debilitentur eorum elecciones, radicem, i. [id est] natuitates eorum, que confortat omnem planetam debilem in itinere.’ The sense of which is—‘For all are agreed, that “elections” are weak, except in the case of the rich; for these, although their elections be weakened, have a “root” of their own, that is to say, their nativities (or horoscopes); which root strengthens every planet that is of weak influence with respect to a journey.’ This is extracted, says Tyrwhitt, from a Liber Electionum by a certain Zael; see MS. Harl. 80; MS. Bodley 1648. This is a very fair example of the jargon to be found in old books on astrology. The old astrologers used to alter their predictions almost at pleasure, by stating that their results depended on several causes, which partly counteracted one another; an arrangement of which the convenience is obvious. Thus, if the aspect of the planets at the time inquired about appeared to be adverse to a journey, it might still be the case (they said) that such evil aspect might be overcome by the fortunate aspect of the inquirer’s horoscope; or, conversely, an ill aspect in the horoscope could be counteracted by a fit election of a time for action. A rich man would probably be fitted with a fortunate horoscope, or else why should he buy one? Such horoscope depended on the aspect of the heavens at the time of birth or ‘nativity,’ and, in particular, upon the ‘ascendant’ at that time; i.e. upon the planets lying nearest to the point of the zodiac which happened, at that moment, to be ascending, i.e. just appearing above the horizon. So Chaucer, in his Treatise on the Astrolobe, ed. Skeat, bk. ii. § 4, explains the matter, saying—‘The assendent sothly, as wel in alle natuiitez as in questiouns and elecciottns of tymes, is a thing which pat thise Astrologiens gretly obseruen; &c. The curious reader may find much more to the same effect in the same Treatise, with directions to ‘make roots’ in pt. ii. § 44.

The curious may further consult the Epitome Astrologiae of Johannes Hispalensis. The whole of Book iv. of that work is ‘De Electionibus,’ and the title of cap. xv. is Prò Itinere. See Chaucer’s Astrolabe, ed.
Skeat, pref. p. liv.

Lydgate, in his Siege of Thebes, just at the beginning, describes the astronomers as casting the horoscope of the infant Ædipus. They were expected

’to yeue a judgement,
The roote i-take at the ascendent,
Truly sought out, by minute and degre,
The selfe houre of his natiuete,
Not foryet the heauenly mansions
Clerely searched by smale fraccions,’ &c.

To take a different example, Ashmole, in his Theatrwm Chemicum, 1652, says in a note on p. 450—‘Generally in all Elections the Efficacy of the Starrs are (sic) used, as it were by a certayne application made thereof to those unformed Natures that are to be wrought upon;
whereby to further the working thereof, and make them more available to our purpose. . . . And by such Elections as good use may be made of the Celestiall influences, as a Physitian doth of the variety of herbes.
. . . . But Nativities are the Radices of Elections, and therefore we ought chiefly to looke backe upon them as the principal Root and Foundation of all Operations; and next to them the quality of the Thing we intend to fit must be respected, so that, by an apt position of Heaven, and fortifying the Planets and Houses in the Nativity of the Operator, and making them agree with the thing signified, the impression made by that influence will abundantly augment the Operation,’ &c.; with much more to the same effect. Several passages in Norton’s Ordinall, printed in the same volume (see pp. 60, 100), shew clearly what is meant by Chaucer in his Prologue, ll. 415-7. The Doctor could ‘fortune a person’s ascendent,’ i.e. render his horoscope lucky, by the election of a time, suitable to that horoscope, when the prescribed remedies were to be applied.

1. 314. Roote is the astrological term for the epoch from which to reckon. The exact moment of a nativity being known, the astrologers were supposed to be able to calculate everything else. See the last note.

1. 332. Alkaron, the Koran; al is the Arabic article.

1. 333. Here Makomete is used instead of Mahoun (l. 224). See Irving’s Life of Mahomet.

Message, messenger. This is a correct form, according to the usages of Middle English; cf. l. 144. In like manner, we find prison used to mean a prisoner, which is often puzzling at first sight.

1. 340. ‘Because we denied Mahomet, our (object of) belief.’

1. 360. ‘O serpent under the form of woman, like that Serpent that is bound in hell.’ The allusion here is not a little curious.
It clearly refers to the old belief that the serpent who tempted Eve appeared to her with a woman's head, and it is sometimes so represented. I observed it, for instance, in the chapter-house of Salisbury Cathedral; and see the woodcut at p. 73 of Wright's History of Caricature and Grotesque in Art. In Peter Comestor's Historia Libri Genesis, we read of Satan—'Elegit etiam quoddam genus serpentinis (vt ait Beda) virgineum vultum habens.' In the alliterative Troy Book, ed. Panton and Donaldson, p. 144, the Tempter is called Lyuyaton (i.e. Leviathan), and it is said of him that he

'Hade a face vne fowmet as a fre maydon;' l. 4451. And, again, in Piers the Plowman, B. xviii. 355, Satan is compared to a 'lusarde [lizard] with a lady visage.' In the Ancren Riwle, p. 207, we are gravely informed that a scorpion is a kind of serpent that has a face somewhat like that of a woman, and puts on a pleasant countenance.

To remember this gives peculiar force to ll. 370, 371.

l. 367. Knownestowwe is probably a trisyllable; and the olde to be read tholdé. But in l. 371, the word Makestow, being differently placed in the line, is to be read with the e slurred over, almost a disyllable.

l. 380. Moste, might. It is not always used like the modern must.

l. 404. There are undoubtedly a few lines in Chaucer, in which the first foot consists of one syllable only; this is one of them, the word But standing by itself as a foot. So also in B. 497, G. 341, &c. See Ellis's Early English Pronunciation, pp. 333, 649. This peculiarity was pointed out by me in 1869, in the Aldine edition of Chaucer, i. 174. For the sense of scorpion, see the extract from the Ancren Riwle, in note to l. 360. So also wicked gost means the Evil Spirit, the Tempter.

l. 421. Pronounce ever rapidly, and accent successour on the first syllable. In the margin of MSS. E., Hn., Pt., and Cp. is the following note: 'Nota, de inopinato dolore. Semper mundane leticte tristicia repentina succedit. Mundana igitur felicitas multis amaritudinisus est respersa. Extrema gaudii luctus occupat. Andi ergo salubre consilian; in die honorun ne immemor sis malorum.' These maxims seem to be scraps taken from different authors. I have found one of them in Boethius, De Consolatione Philosophiae, lib. ii. pr. 4—'Quam multis amaritudinisus humanae felicitatis dulcedo respersa est;' which Chaucer translated by—'Pe swetnesse of manues wellfulnessse is yspranid wil manye bitternesse,' ed. Morris, p. 42: and the same expression is repeated here, in l. 422. Gower quotes the same passage from Boethius in the prologue to his Confessio Amantis. The next sentence is from Prov. xiv. 13—'Rius dolore miscibitur, et extrema gaudii luctus occupat.' With the last clause, in ll. 426, 427, compare Eccl. xi. 8.

l. 438. Compare Trivet's French prose version:—'Dount ele fist estorier vne neef de vitale, de payn quest apele bisquit, & de peis, & de feues, de sucre, & de meel, & de vyn, pur sustenence de la vie de la pucelle par treiz annz; e en cele neef fit mettre la richesse & le tresour que lempire Tiberie auoit maunde oue la pucele Constance, sa fille; e en cele neef fist la soudane mettre la pucele saunz sigle, & saunz neuiroun, & saunz chescune maner de eide de homme.' I.e. 'Then she caused a ship to be stored with victuals, with bread that is called biscuit, with peas, beans, sugar, honey, and wine, to sustain the maiden’s life for three years. And in this ship she caused to be placed the riches and treasure which the Emperor Tiberius had sent with the maid Constance his daughter; and in this ship the Sultaness caused the maiden to be put, without sail or oar, or any kind of human aid.'

Foot-hot, hastily. It occurs in Gower, in The Romaunt of the Rose, L. 3827, and in Barbour’s Bruce, iii. 418, xiii. 454. Compare the term hot-trod, explained by Sir W. Scott to mean the pursuit of marauders with bloodhounds; see note 3 H to the Lay of the Last Minstrel. We also find hot fôt, i.e. immediately, in the Debate of the Body and the Soul, l. 481.

II. 451-462. Compare these lines with verses 3 and 5 of the hymn ‘Lustra sex qui iam peregit’ in the office of Lauds from Passion Sunday to Wednesday in Holy Week inclusive, in the Roman breviary.

‘Crux fidelis, inter omnes Arbor una nobilis:
Silua talem nulla profert
Fronde, flore, germine:
Dulce ferrum, dulce lignum,
Dulce pondus sustinent.

Sola digna tu fuisti
Ferre mundi uictimam;
Atque portum praeparare,
Arca mundo naufrago,
Quam sacer cruor perunxit,
Fusus Agni corpore.’

See the translation in Hymns Ancient and Modern, No. 97, part 2 (new edition), beginning—‘Now the thirty years accomplished.’

1. 460. Hym and here, him and her, i.e. man and woman; as in Piers the Plowman, A. Pass. i. l. 100. The allusion is to the supposed power of the cross over evil spirits. See The Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris; especially the story of the Invention of the Cross by St. Helen, p. 160—‘And anone, as he had made the [sign of the] crosse, þe grete multitudo of deylles vanished away;’ or, in the Latin original, ‘statimque ut edidit signum crucis, omnis illa daemonum multitudo cuanuit;’ Aurea Legenda, ed. Grässe, 2nd ed. p. 311. Cf. Piers Plowman, B. xviii. 429-431.

1. 461. The reading of this line is certain, and must not be altered. But it is impossible to parse the line without at once noticing that there is a great difficulty in the construction. The best solution is obtained by taking which in the sense of whom. A familiar example of this use of which for who occurs in the Lord's Prayer. See also Abbot's Shakespearian Grammar, Sect. 265. The construction is as follows—'O victorious tree, protection of true people, that alone wast worthy to bear the King of Heaven with His new wounds—the White Lamb that was hurt with the spear—O expeller of fiends out of both man and woman, on whom (i.e. the men and women on whom) thine arms faithfully spread out,' &c.

Lymes means the arms of the cross, spread before a person to protect him.

1. 474. Tyr, where; as usual.
1. 475. 'Was eaten by the lion ere he could escape.' Cf. l. 437.
1. 491. See Revelation vii. 1–3.
1. 497. Here As seems to form a foot by itself. See note to l. 404.

1. 500. Alluding to St. Mary the Egyptian (Maria Egiptiaca), who according to the legend, after a youth spent in debauchery, lived entirely alone for the last forty-seven years of her life in the wilderness beyond the Jordan. She lived in the fifth century. Her day is April 9. See Mrs. Jameson's Sacred and Legendary Art; Rutebief, ed. Jubinal, ii. 106–150; Maundeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 96; Aurea Legenda, ed. Grässe, cap. Ivi. She was often confused with St. Mary Magdalen.

1. 508. Northumberland, the district, not the county. Yorkshire is, in fact, meant, as the French version expressly mentions the Humber.

1. 510. Of al a tyde, for the whole of an hour.
1. 512. The constable; named Elda by Trivet and Gower.

1. 519. Trivet says that she answered Elda in his own language, 'en sessoneys,' in Saxon, for she had learnt many languages in her youth.

1. 525. The word deye seems to have had two pronunciations; in l. 644 it is dye, with a different rime. In fact, Mr. Cromie's 'Ryme-Index' to Chaucer proves the point. On the one hand deye rimes to aweye, disobeye, dreye, preye, seye, tweye, weye; and on the other dye rimes to avourye, bigamy, compaignye, Emelye, genterye, lye, maladye, &c.

1. 527. Forgat hir mynde, lost her memory.

1. 531. The final e in plese is preserved from elision by the cæsural pause. Or. we may read plesen; yet the MSS. have plese.

1. 578. Alla, i.e. Ælla, king of Northumberland, a.d. 560–567; the same whose name Gregory (afterwards Pope) turned, by a pun, into Alleluia, according to the version of the celebrated story about Gregory and the English slaves, as given in Beda, Eccl. Hist. b. ii. c. i.

1. 584. Quyte her whyle, repay her time; i.e. her pains, trouble; as when we say 'it is worth while. Wile is not intended.

1. 585. 'The plot of the knight against Constance, and also her subsequent adventure with the steward, are both to be found, with some variations, in a story in the Gesta Romanorum, ch. 101; MS. Harl.
NOTES TO GROUP E.

1. 620. Berth hir on hond, affirms falsely; lit. bears her in hand. Chaucer uses the phrase ‘to bere in hond’ with the sense of false affirmation, sometimes with the idea of accusing falsely, as here and in the Wyf of Bathes Prologue. C. T. 5975; and sometimes with that of persuading falsely, C. T. 5814, 5962. In Shakespeare the sense is rather—‘to keep in expectation, to amuse with false pretences;’ Nares’s Glossary. Barbour uses it in the more general sense of ‘to affirm,’ or ‘to make a statement,’ whether falsely or truly.

1. 634. ‘And bound Satan; and he still lies where he (then) lay.’ In the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, Christ descends into hell, and (according to some versions) binds him with chains; see Piers Plowman, B. xviii. 401.

1. 639. Susanne; see the story of Susannah, in the Apocrypha.

1. 641. The Virgin’s mother is called Anna in the Apocryphal Gospel of James. Her day is July 26. See Aurea Legenda, ed. Grässe, cap. cxxxi; Cowper’s Apocryphal Gospels, p. 4.

1. 645. Here pale is pronounced as a disyllable.

1. 647. ‘Where that he gat (could get) for himself no favour.’

1. 660. ‘For pite renneth sone in gentil herte; ’ Knightes Tale, l. 903.

And see note to Sq. Tale, F. 479.

1. 664. Vs auyse, deliberate with ourselves, consider the matter again. Compare the law-phrase Le roi s’avisera, by which the king refuses assent to a measure proposed. ‘We will consider whom to appoint as judge.’

1. 666. I.e. a copy of the Gospels in Welsh or British, called in the French prose version ‘liure des Ewangeiles.’ Agreements were sometimes written on the fly-leaves of copies of the Gospels, as may be seen in two copies of the A.S. version of them.

1. 669. A very similar miracle is recorded in the old alliterative romance of Joseph of Arimathea, l. 362. The French version has:—‘a peine anoit fini la parole, qe vne mayn close, com poyn de homme, apparut deuant Elda et quant questoient en presence, et ferri tiel coup en le haterel le felonn, que ambedeus lez eus lui enuolerent de la teste, & les dentz hors de la bouche; & le feloun chai abatu a la terre; et a ceo dist vne voiz en le oyance de touz: Aduersus filament matris ecclesie ponebas scandalum; hec fecisti, et tacui.’ I.e. ‘Scarceely had he ended the word, when a closed hand, like a man’s fist, appeared before Elda and all who were in the presence, and smote such a blow on the nape of the felon’s neck that both his eyes flew out of his head, and the teeth out of his mouth; and the felon fell smitten down to the earth; and therupon a voice said in the hearing of all, “Against the daughter of Mother Church thou wast laying a scandal; this hast thou done, and I held my peace.”’ The reading tacui suggests that, in l. 676, the word holde should rather be held; but the MSS. do not recognise this reading.

l. 697. Hir thoughte, it seemed to her; thoughte is here impersonal; so in l. 699. The French text adds that Domulde (Donegild) was, moreover, jealous of hearing the praises of Constance’s beauty.

l. 701. Me list nat, it pleases me not, I do not wish to. He does not wish to give every detail. In this matter Chaucer is often very judicious; Gower and others often give the more unimportant matters as fully as the rest. Cf. l. 706; and see Squyeres Tale, F. 401.

l. 707. Trivet says—‘Puis a vn demi an passe, vint nouele al Roy que les gentz de Albanie, qe souznt les Escoz, furent passes leur boundes et guerrirent les terres le Roy. Dount par comun conseuil, le Roi assembla son ost de rebouter ses enemis. Et auant son departir vers Escocie, baila la Reine Constance sa femme en la garde Elda, le Conestable du chastel, et a Lucius, leuesq de Bangor; si leur chargea qe quant ele fut deliueres denfaunt, qui lui feisoient hastuemement savoir la nouele,’ i.e. ‘Then, after half-a-year, news came to the king that the people of Albania, who are the Scots, had passed their bounds, and warred on the king’s lands. Then by common counsel the king gathered his host to rebut his foes. And before his departure towards Scotland, he committed Queen Constance his wife to the keeping of Elda, the constable of the castle, and of Lucius, bishop of Bangor, and charged them that when she was delivered, they should hastily let him know the news.’

l. 722. Knaue child, male child; as in Clerkes Tale. E. 444.

l. 723. At the fontstoon, i.e. at his baptism; French text—‘al baptisme fume Moris.’

l. 729. To don his avantage, to suit his convenience. He hoped, by going only a little out of his way, to tell Donegild the news also, and to receive a reward for doing so. Trivet says that the old Queen was then at Knaresborough, situated ‘between England and Scotland, as in an intermediate place.’ Its exact site is less than seventeen miles west of York. Donegild pretends to be very pleased at the news, and gives the man a rich present.

l. 736. Lettres; so in all 7 MSS.; Tyrwhitt reads lettre. But it is right as it is. Lettres is sometimes used, like Lat. literae, in a singular sense, and the French text has ‘les lettres.’ Examples occur in Piers Plowman, B. ix. 38; Bruce, ii. 80. See l. 744, and note to l. 747.

l. 738. If ye wol ought, if you wish (to say) anything.

l. 740. Donegild is disyllabic here, as in l. 795, but in l. 805 it appears to have three syllables. I have before remarked that Chaucer alters proper names so as to suit his metre; see Pref. to Prioresse Tale, p. lxiii. l. 13, or p. lxiv. l. 12 (2nd ed.).

l. 743. Sadly, steadily, with the idea of long continuance.
1. 747. Lettre; here the singular form is used, but it is a matter of indifference. Exactly the same variation occurs in Barbour’s Bruce, ii. 80:—

‘And, among othir, lettres ar gayn
To the byschop off Androwis towne,
That tauld how slayn wes that baroun.
The lettr tauld hym all the deid,’ &c.

This circumstance, of exchanging the messenger’s letters for forged ones, is found in Matthew Paris’s account of the Life of Offa the first; ed. Wats, pp. 965–968. See the Preface.

1. 748. Direct, directed, addressed; French text ‘maundez.’
1. 751. Pronounce horrible as in French.
1. 752. The last word in this line should certainly be nas (= was not), as has kindly been pointed out to me; though the seven MSS. all have was. By this alteration we secure a true rime.
1. 754. Elf; French text—‘ele fu malueise espirit en fourme de femme,’ she was an evil spirit in form of woman. Elf is the A.S. ælf, Icel. dilfr, G. alp and elf; Shakespeare writes ouphes for elves. ‘The Edda distinguishes between Ljósálfar, the elves of light, and Dökkálfar, elves of darkness; the latter are not elsewhere mentioned either in modern fairy tales or in old writers. ... In the Alvismål, elves and dwarfs are clearly distinguished as different. The abode of the elves in the Edda is ‘Alfheimar, fairy land, and their king the god Frey, the god of light. In the fairy tales the Elves haunt the hills; hence their name Huldufólk, hidden people; respecting their origin, life, and customs, see I’slenzkar jþjóðsögur, i. 1. In old writers the Elves are rarely mentioned; but that the same tales were told as at present is clear;’ note on the word dilfr, in Cleasby and Vigfusson’s Icelandic Dictionary. See also Keightley’s Fairy Mythology, and Brand’s Popular Antiquities. The word is here used in a bad sense, and is nearly equivalent to witch. In the Prompt. Parv. we find—‘Elf, spryte. Lamia;’ and Mr. Way notes that these elves were often supposed to bewitch children, and to use them cruelly.

1. 767. Pronounce agreeable as in French, and with an accent on the first syllable.

1. 769. Take, handed over, delivered. Take often means to give or hand over in Middle English: very seldom to convey or bring.

1. 771. In the margin of MSS. E., Hn., Cp., and Pt. is written—Quid turpius ebriosus, cui fetor in ore, tremor in corpore, qui promit stulta, prodit occulta, cuius mens alienatur, facies transformatur? nullum enim latet secretum ubi regnat ebrietas. This is no doubt the original of the stanza, ii. 771–777; cf. note to C. 561. There is nothing answering to it in Trivet.
1. 778. ‘O Donegild, I have no language fit to tell,’ &c.
1. 782. Mannish, man-like, i.e. harsh and cruel, not mild and gentle like a woman. But Chaucer is not satisfied with the epithet, and says he ought rather to call her ‘fiend-like.’
1. 789. 'He stowed away plenty (of wine) under his girdle,' i.e. drank his fill.

1. 794. Pronounce constébl' much as if it were French, with an accent on a. In 1. 808 the accent is on o. Lastly, in 1. 858 all three syllables are fully sounded.

1. 798. 'Three days and a quarter of an hour;' i.e. she was to be allowed only three days, and after that to start off as soon as possible. Tide (like tíð in Icelandic) sometimes means an hour. The French text says—'deynz quatre iours,' within four days.

1. 801. Croude, push; see ll. 296, 299 above.

11. 813–826. Lines 813–819 are not in the French, and ll. 820–826 are not at all close to the original.

11. 827–833. The French text only has—'en esperaunce qe dure commencement amenera dieu a bon fyn, et qil me purra en la mere sauuer, qi en mere et en terre est de toute puissaunce.'

1. 835. The beautiful stanzas in ll. 834–868 are all Chaucer's own; and of the next stanza, ll. 869–875, the French text gives but the merest hint.

1. 842. Eggement, incitement. The same word is used in other descriptions of the Fall. Thus, in Piers Plowman, B. i. 65, it is said of Satan that 'Adam and Eue he egged to ille;' and in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 241, it is said of Adam that 'thurgh the eggyng of Eue he ete of an apple.'

1. 873. Purchase, provide, make provision. So in Troilus, bk. ii. 1125, the line 'And of some goodly answer you purchase,' means—and provide yourself with some kind answer, i.e. be ready with a kind reply.

11. 875–884. Much abridged from the French text.

1. 885. Tormented, tortured. However, the French text says the messenger acknowledged his drunkenness freely. Examination by torture was so common, that Chaucer seems to have regarded the mention of it as being the most simple way of telling the story.

1. 893. Out of drede, without doubt, certainly; cf. l. 869. The other equally common expression out of doute comes to much the same thing, because doute in Middle-English has in general the meaning of fear or dread, not of hesitation. See Group E. 634, 1155; and Proli. 487.

1. 894. Pleynly rede, fully read, read at length. In fact, Chaucer judiciously omits the details of the French text, where we read that King Ælla rushed into his mother's room with a drawn sword as she lay asleep, roused her by crying 'traitress!' in a loud voice, and, after hearing the full confession which she made in the extremity of her terror, slew her and cut her to pieces as she lay in bed.

1. 901. Fleteth, floats. French text—'le quinte an de cest exil, come ele fu flotaunt sur le mere,' &c.

1. 905. The name of the castle is certainly not given in the French text, which merely says it was 'vn chastel dun Admiral de paens,' i.e. a castle of an admiral of the Pagans.

1. 913. Shortly, briefly; because the poet considerably abridges this part of the narrative. The steward’s name was Thelous.

Il. 932–945. These two stanzas are wholly Chaucer’s, plainly written as a parallel passage to that in Il. 470–504 above.

1. 940. See the story of Olofernes in the Monkes Tale, B. 3741; and the note. I select the spelling Olofernes here, because it is that of the majority of the MSS., and agrees with the title De Oloferno in the Monkes Tale.

1. 947. In 1.465 Chaucer mentions the ‘Strait of Marrok,’ i.e. Morocco, though there is no mention of it in the French text; so here he alludes to it again, but by a different name, viz. ‘the mouth of Jubalter and Septe.’ Jubaltar (Gibraltar) is from the Arabic jabálut tārik, i.e. the mountain of Tarik; who was the leader of a band of Saracens that made a descent upon Spain in the eighth century. Septe is Ceuta, on the opposite coast of Africa.

1. 965. Shortly, briefly; because Chaucer here again abridges the original, which relates how the Romans burnt the Sultaness, and slew more than 11,000 of the Saracens, without a single death or even wound on their own side.

1. 967. Senatour. His name was Arsemius of Cappadocia; his wife’s name was Helen. Accent victorie on the e.

1. 969. As seith the storie, as the history says. The French text relates this circumstance fully.

1. 971. The French text says that, though Arsemius did not recognise Constance; she, on her part, recognised him at once, though she did not reveal it.

1. 981. Aunte. Helen, the wife of Arsemius, was daughter of Sallustius, brother of the Emperor Tiberius, and Constance’s uncle. Thus Helen was really Constance’s first cousin. Chaucer may have altered it purposely; but it looks as if he had glanced at the sentence—‘Cest heleyne, la nece Constaunce, taunt tendrement ama sa nece,’ &c., and had read it as—‘This Helen... loved her niece so tenderly.’ In reality, the word nece means ‘cousin’ here, being applied to Helen as well as to Constance.

1. 982. She, i.e. Helen; for Constance knew Helen.

1. 991. To receyuen, i.e. to submit himself to any penance which the Pope might see fit to impose upon him. Journeys to Rome were actually made by English kings; Ælfred was sent to Rome as a boy, and his father, Æthelwulf, also spent a year there, but (as the Chronicle tells us) he went ‘mid micelre weorðnesse,’ with much pomp.
1. 994. Wikked werkes; especially the murder of his mother, as Trivet says. See note to l. 894.

1. 1009. Som men wolde sayn, some relate the story by saying. The expression occurs again in l. 1086. On the strength of it, Tyrwhitt concluded that Chaucer here refers to Gower, who tells the story of Constance in Book ii. of his Confessio Amantis. He observes that Gower's version of the story includes both the circumstances which are introduced by this expression. But this is not conclusive. It appears, rather, that Gower's version of the story is the later one of the two, and there is no reason why the expression som men may not refer to Nicholas Trivet, who also makes mention of these circumstances. See this further discussed in the Preface. In the present instance the French text has—

'A ceo temps de la venuz le Roi a Rome, comensca Moris son disciotisme aan. Cist estoit apris priuement de sa mere Constance, qe, quant il irreet a la feste ou son seignur le senatour,' &c.; i.e. At this time of the king's coming to Rome, Maurice began his eighteenth year. He was secretly instructed by his mother Constance, that, when he should go to the feast with his lord the senator, &c. See also the note to l. 1086 below.

1. 1014. Metes space, time of eating. This circumstance strikingly resembles the story of young Roland, who, whilst still a child, was instructed by his mother Bertha to appear before his uncle Charlemagne, by way of introducing himself. The story is well told in Uhland's ballad entitled 'Klein Roland,' a translation of which is given at pp. 335–340 of my 'Ballads and Songs of Uhland,'

'They had but waited a little while,
    When Roland returns more bold;
    With hasty step to the king he comes,
    And seizes his cup of gold.

"What ho, there! stop! you saucy imp!"
    Are the words that loudly ring.
    But Roland clutches the beaker still
    With eyes fast fixed on the king.

The king at the first looked fierce and dark,
    But soon perforce he smiled—
    "Thou comest," he said, "into golden halls
    As though they were woodlands wild," &c.

The result is also similar; Bertha is reconciled to Charlemagne, much as Custance is to Ælfric.

1. 1034. Aught, in any way, at all; lit. 'a whit.'

1. 1035. Syghte, sighed. So also pyghte, 'pitched;' flyghte, 'plucked;' and shryste, 'shrieked.' It occurs again in the Romaunt of the Rose, l. 1746:
'Than took I with myn hondes tweye
The arwe, and ful faste it out plyghte,
And in the pulling sore I syghte.'

1. 1036. That he myghte, as fast as he could.

1. 1038. 'I ought to suppose, in accordance with reasonable opinion.' Chaucer tells the story quite in his own way. There is no trace of ll. 1038–1042 in the French, and scarcely any of ll. 1048–1071, which is all in his own excellent strain.

1. 1058. Both twyes and owen are dissyllabic.

1. 1060. Alle his halwes, all His saints. Hence the term All-hallowmas, i.e. All Saints' day.

1. 1061. Wisly, certainly. As haue, I pray that he may have; see note to l. 859 above. 'I pray He may so surely have mercy on my soul, as that I am as innocent of your suffering as Maurice my son is like you in the face.'

1. 1078. After this line, the French text tells us that King Æella presented himself before Pope Pelagius, who absolved him for the death of his mother.

1. 1086. Here again Tyrwhitt supposes Chaucer to follow Gower. But, in fact, Chaucer and Gower both consulted Trivet, who says here—'Constaunce charga son fitz Morice del messager [or message] . . . Et puis, quant Morice estoit denaunt lempereur venuz, oue la compagnie honurable, et anoit son message fest de part le Roi son pere,' &c.; i.e. 'Constance charged her son Maurice with the message . . . and then, when Maurice was come before the emperor, with the honourable company, and had done his message on behalf of the king his father,' &c.

1. 1090. As he; used much as we should now use 'as one.' It refers to the Emperor, of course.

1. 1091. Sente, elliptical for 'as that he would send.' Tyrwhitt reads send; but it is best to leave an expression like this as it stands in the MSS. It was probably a colloquial idiom; and, in the next line, we have wente. Observe that sente is in the subjunctive mood, and is equivalent to 'he would send.'

1. 1107. Chaucer so frequently varies the length and accent of a proper name that there is no objection to the supposition that we are here to read Cústancë in three syllables, with an accent on the first syllable. In exactly the same way, we find Grisildis in three syllables (E. 948), though in most other passages it is Grisilda. We have had Cústancë, accented on the first syllable, several times; see ll. 438, 556, 566, 576, &c.; also Custáncë, three syllables, ll. 184, 274, 319, 612, &c. Tyrwhitt inserts a second your before Custance, but without authority.
Perhaps it improves the line, but it is better to leave the text untouched.

1. 1109. It am I; it is I. It is the usual idiom. So in the A.S. version of St. John vi. 20, we find 'ic hyt eom,' i.e. I it am, and in a Dutch New Testament, A.D. 1700, I find 'Ick ben 't,' i.e. I am it. The Meso-Gothic version omits it, having simply 'Ik im;' so does Wyclif's, which has 'I am.' Tyndale, A.D. 1526, has 'it ys I.'

1. 1113. Thonketh, pronounced thonk'eth; so also eyl' th, B. 1171, Abyd' th, B. 1175; Priories Tale, &c. p. 6. So also tak' th, l. 1142 below. Of, for.

1. 1123. The French text tells us that he was named Maurice of Cappadocia, and was also known, in Latin, as Mauritianus Christianissimus Imperator. Trivet tells us no more about him, except that he accounts for the title 'of Cappadocia' by saying that Arsenius (the senator who found Constance and Maurice and took care of them) was a Cappadocian. Gibbon says—'The Emperor Maurice derived his origin from ancient Rome; but his immediate parents were settled at Arabissus in Cappadocia, and their singular felicity preserved them alive to behold and partake the fortune of their august son. . . . Maurice ascended the throne at the mature age of 43 years; and he reigned above 20 years over the east and over himself.' Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, cap. xlv. He was murdered, with all his seven children, by his successor, Phocas the Usurper; Nov. 27, A.D. 602. His accession was in A.D. 582.

1. 1127. The statement 'I bere it not in mynde,' i.e. I do not remember it, may be taken to mean that Chaucer could find nothing about Maurice in his French text beyond the epithet Christianissimus, which he has skillfully expanded into l. 1123. He vaguely refers us to 'olde Romayn gestes,' that is, to lives of the Roman emperors, for he can hardly mean the Gesta Romanorum in this instance. In the Marchauntes Tale, where he really refers to the Gesta, he uses the definite article, and calls them 'the Romain gestes;' C. T. 10158. Gibbon refers us to Evagrius, lib. v. and lib. vi.; Theophylact, Simocatta; Theophanes, Zonaras, and Cedrenus.

1. 1132. In the margin of MSS. E., Hn., Cp., Pt. is written—'A mane usque ad vesperam mutabitur tempus. Tenent tympanum et gaudent ad somum organi, &c.'

1. 1135. In the margin of MSS. E., Hn., Cp., Pt. is written—'Quis v/quam vnicam diem totam duxit in sua dilectione [vel delectatione] iocundam? quem in aliqua parte diei reatus consciencie, vel impetus Ire, vel motus concupiscencie non turbauerit? quem liur Inuidie, vel Ardor Auarie, vel tumor superbie non vexauerit? quem aliqua inactura vel offensa, vel passio non commouerit, &c.' Cp. Pt. insert inde before non turbauerit. This corresponds to nothing in the French text, but is what Chaucer in l. 1139 calls 'a sentence,' i.e. a choice saying.
NOTES TO GROUP C.

1. 1143. I gesse, I suppose. Chaucer somewhat alters the story. Trivet says that Ælla died at the end of nine months after this. Half-a-year after, Constance repairs to Rome. Thirteen days after her arrival, her father Tiberius dies. A year later, Constance herself dies, on St. Clement's day (Nov. 23), A.D. 584, and is buried at Rome, near her father, in St. Peter's church. The date 584, here given by Trivet, should rather be 583; the death of Tiberius took place on Aug. 14, 582; see Gibbon.

NOTES TO THE PARDONERES TALE (GROUP C).

The Words of the Host.

1. 288. Harrow, also spelt haro, a cry of astonishment; see Non. Prest. Tale, 225. 'Haro, the ancient Norman hue and cry; the exclamation of a person to procure assistance when his person or property was in danger. To cry out haro on any one, to denounce his evil doings;' Halliwell's Dictionary. Spenser has it, F. Q. ii. 6. 43; see Harrow in Kitchin's Gloss. to Spenser, bk. ii.

On the oaths used by the Host, see note to 1. 651 below.

1. 289. The Host is denouncing the decemvir Appius Claudius, whose false judgment had previously been described by the Doctor, in telling the story of Virginia.

1. 293. 'She (Virginia) bought her beauty too dear;' she paid too high a price; it cost her her life.

1. 299. Both giftes, both (kinds of) gifts; i.e. gifts of fortune, such as wealth, and of nature, such as beauty. Compare Dr. Johnson's poem on The Vanity of Human Wishes, imitated from the tenth satire of Juvenal.

1. 302. Pitous, piteous, pitiful. Such is the reading of all the seven best MSS. Tyrwhitt found the reading erneful in some MSS., which he correctly supposes to be bad spelling for ermful, miserable, from A.S. earm, wretched; see note to 1. 312. The meaning, in fact, is the same.

1. 303. Is no fors, it is no matter. Here it must be supplied, the full phrase being it is no fors. In some cases Chaucer not only omits it, but is also; writing simply no fors, as in Group E. 1092, 2430. We also find I do no force, i.e. I care not, C. T. 6816; and They yeve no force, they care not, Romaunt of the Rose, 4826. Palsgrave has—'I gyue no force. I care nat for a thyng, Il ne men chault."

l. 306. Ipocras is the usual spelling, in English MSS., of Hippocrates; see Prologue, l. 431. So also in the Book of the Duchess, 571, 572:—

'Ne hele me may no physicien, Nought Ipocras, ne Galien.'

In the present passage it does not signify the physician himself, but a beverage named after him. 'It was composed of wine, with spices and sugar, strained through a cloth. It is said to have taken its name from Hippocrates' sleeve, the term apothecaries gave to a strainer;' Halliwell's Dict. s.v. Ipocras. In the same work, s.v. Ipocras, are several receipts for making it, the simplest being one copied from Arnold's Chronicle:—'Take a quart of red wyne, an ounce of synamon, and half an unce of gynger; a quarter of an ounce of greynes, and long peper, and halfe a pounde of sugar; and brose all this, and than put them in a bage of wullen clotehe, made therefore, with the wyne; and lette it hange over a vessel, tul! the wyne be rune thorowe.' Halliwell adds that—'Ipocras seems to have been a great favourite with our ancestors, being served up at every entertainment, public or private. It generally made a part of the last course, and was taken immediately after dinner, with wafers or some other light biscnits; &c. See Pegge's Form of Cury, p. 161; Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, pp. 125-128, 267; and Nares's Glossary, s.v. Hippocrates.

Galianes. In like manner this word (hitherto unexplained as far as I am aware) must signify drinks named after Galen, whose name is spelt Galien (in Latin, Galienus) not only in Chancer, but in other authors, as pointed out by Tyrwhitt. See the sixth line on this page.

l. 310. Lyk a prelat, like a dignitary of the church, like a bishop or abbot. Mr. Jephson, in Bell's edition, suggests that the Doctor was in holy orders, and that this is why we are told in the Prologue, l. 438, that 'his studie was but litel on the bible.' I see no reason for this guess, which is quite unsupported. Chancer does not say he is a prelate, but that he is like one; because he had been highly educated, as a member of a 'learned profession' should be.

Ronyan is here of three syllables and rimes with man; in l. 320 it is of two syllables, and rimes with anon. It looks as if the Host and Pardoner were not very clear about the saint's name, only knowing him to swear by. In Pilkington's Works (Parker Society), we find a mention of 'St. Tronian's fast,' p. 80; and again, of 'St. Rinian's fast,' p. 551, in a passage which is a repetition of the former. The forms Ronyan and Rinian are evidently corruptions of Ronan, a saint whose name is well known to readers of 'St. Ronan's Well.' Of St. Ronan scarcely anything is known. The fullest account that can easily be found is the following:—
'Ronan, B. and C. Feb. 7.—Beyond the mere mention of his commemoration as S. Ronan, bishop at Kilmaronen, in Levenax, in the body of the Breviary of Aberdeen, there is nothing said about this saint. . . Camerarius (p. 86) makes this Ronanus the same as he who is mentioned by Beda (Hist. Ecc. lib. iii. c. 25). This Ronan died in a.d. 778. The Ulster annals give at [a.d.] 737 (736)—"Mors Ronain Abbatis Cinningaraud." Ængus places this saint at the 9th of February,' &c.; Kalendars of Scottish Saints, by Bp. A. P. Forbes, 1872, p. 441. Kilmaronen is Kilmaronock, in the county and parish of Dumbarton. There are traces of St. Ronan in about seven place-names in Scotland, according to the same authority. Under the date of Feb. 7 (February, vol. ii. 3 B), the Acta Sanctorum has a few lines about St. Ronan, who, according to some, flourished under King Malduin, a.d. 664–684; or, according to others, about 603. The notice concludes with the remark—'Maiorem lucem desideramus.' Beda says that 'Ronan, a Scot by nation, but instructed in ecclesiastical truth either in France or Italy,' was mixed up in the controversy which arose about the keeping of Easter, and was 'a most zealous defender of the true Easter.' This controversy took place about a.d. 652, which does not agree with the date above.

1. 311. Tyrwhitt thinks that Shakespeare remembered this expression of Chaucer, when he describes the Host of the Garter as frequently repeating the phrase 'said I well:' Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 3. 11; ii. 1. 226; ii. 3. 93, 99.

In terme, in learned terms; cf. Prol. 323.

1. 312. Erme, to grieve. For the explanation of unusual words, the Glossary should, in general, be consulted; the Notes are intended, for the most part, to explain only phrases and allusions, and to give illustrations of the use of words. Such illustrations are, moreover, often omitted when they can easily be found by consulting such a work as Stratmann’s Old English Dictionary. In the present case, for example, Stratmann gives ten instances of the use of earm or arm as an adjective, meaning wretched; four examples of ermlie, miserable; four of earming; a miserable creature; and five of earnthe, misery. These twenty-three additional examples shew that the word was formerly well understood. It may be added, that a particular interest attaches to this word, in connection with Shakespeare. We may first note that a later instance of ermen or erne, to grieve, occurs in Caxton’s translation of Reynard the Fox, a.d. 1481; see Arber’s reprint. p. 48, l. 5. ‘Thenne departed he fro the kynge so heuyly that many of them ermed,’ i.e. then departed he from the king so sorrowfully that many of them mourned, or were greatly grieved. Now it is my firm belief that this verb to erne, slightly corrupted to erne, is the source of the verb to earn in Shakespeare, which has been further obscured by being changed into yearn in modern editions. Examples are (using the modern corrupt spelling): 'It yearns me not when men my garments wear,' i. e. it grieves me not; Hen. V. iv. 3. 26. 'My manly heart doth yearn,' i.e. grieve; Hen. V. ii. 3. 3. 'Falstaff he is dead, and we must yearn therefore;' Hen. V. ii. 3. 6. 'That every like is not the same, O Cæsar, The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon;' Jul. Cæsar, ii. 2. 129. It is remarkable that Shake- speare never uses the verb to yearn in the modern sense; he expresses that idea solely by the verb to long, which he uses more than sixty times. The prefixed y, found sometimes in old editions also, means no more than the y in the prov. E. yale for ale. And cf. note to l. 302.

l. 314. The Host's form of oath is amusingly ignorant; he is confusing the two oaths 'by corpus Domini' and 'by Christes bones,' and evidently regards corpus as a genitive case. Tyrwhitt alters the phrase to 'By corpus domini,' which wholly spoils the humour of it.

Triacle, a restorative remedy; see Man of Lawes Tale, Group B, l 479.

l. 315. Moyste, new. The word retains the sense of the Lat. musteus and mustus. In Group H. 60 (see p. 116), we find moysty ale spoken of as differing from old ale. But the most peculiar use of the word is in the Prologue, l. 457, where the Wyf of Bath's shoes are described as being moyste and newe.

l. 318. Bel amy, good friend; a common form of address in old French. We also find biais doux amis, sweet good friend; as in—

'Charlot, Charlot, biais doux amis;'

Rutebuef; La Disputoison de Charlot et du Barbier, I. 57. Belamy occurs in an Early Eng. Life of St. Cecilia, MS. Ashmole 43, l. 161. Similar forms are beau filzt, dear son (Piers Plowman, B. vii. 162); beau pere, good father; beau sire, good sir. Cf. beldame.

l. 321. Ale-stake, inn-sign. Speght interprets this by 'may-pole.' He was probably thinking of the ale-pole, such as was sometimes set up before an inn as a sign; see the picture of one in Larwood and Hotten's History of Signboards, Plate II. But the ale-stakes of the fourteenth century were differently placed; instead of being perpendicular, they projected horizontally from the inn, just like the bar which supports a painted sign at the present day. At the end of the ale-stake a large garland was commonly suspended, as mentioned by Chaucer himself (Prol. 667), or sometimes a bunch of ivy, box, or evergreen, called a 'bush;' whence the proverb 'good wine needs no bush,' i.e. nothing to indicate where it is sold; see Hist. Signboards, pp. 3, 4, 6, 233. The clearest information about ale-stakes is obtained from a notice of them in the Liber Albus, ed. Riley, where an ordinance of the time of Richard II is printed, the translation of which runs as follows: 'Also, it was ordained that whereas the ale-stakes, projecting in front of the taverns in Chepe and elsewhere in the said city, extend too far over the king's highways, to the impeding of riders and others, and, by reason of their excessive weight, to the great deterioration of the houses to which they are fixed, . . . . it was ordained, . . . . that no one in future should have a stake bearing either his sign or leaves [i.e. a bush] extending or lying over the King's highway, of greater length than 7 feet at most,' &c. And, at p. 292 of the same work, note 2, Mr. Riley rightly defines an ale-stake to be 'the pole projecting from the house, and supporting a bunch of leaves.'

The word ale-stake occurs in Chatterton's poem of Ælla, stanza 30, where it is used in a manner which shews that the supposed 'Rowley' did not know what it was like. See my note on this; Essay on the Rowley Poems, p. xix.

l. 322. Of a cake; we should now say, a bit of bread; the modern sense of 'cake' is a little misleading. The old cakes were mostly made of dough, whence the proverb 'my cake is dough,' i.e. is not properly baked; Taming of the Shrew, v. i. 145. Shakespeare also speaks of 'cakes and ale,' Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 124. The picture of the 'Simnel Cakes' in Chambers' Book of Days, i. 336, illustrates Chaucer's use of the word in the Prologue, l. 668.

l. 324. The Pardoner was so ready to tell some 'mirth or japes' that the more decent folks in the company try to repress him. It is a curious comment on the popular estimate of his character. He has, moreover, to refresh himself, and to think awhile before he can recollect 'some honest (i.e. decent) thing.'

ll. 327, 328. The Harleian MS. has—
   'But in the cuppe wil I me bethinke
   Upon som honest tale, whil I drinke.'

The Pardoneres Prologue.

Title. The Latin text is copied from l. 334 below; it appears in the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. The A. V. has—'the love of money is the root of all evil;' 1 Tim. vi. 10. It is well worth notice that the novel by Morlinus, quoted in the Preface as a source of the Pardoner's Tale, contains the expression—'radice malorum cupiditatis affecti.' See the Preface.

l. 336. Bulles, bulls from the pope, whom he here calls his 'liege lord;' see ProL 687, and Piers the Plowman, B. ProL 69.

l. 337. Patente; defined by Webster as 'an official document, conferring a right or privilege on some person or party;' etc. It was so called because 'patent' or open to public inspection. 'When indulgences came to be sold, the pope made them a part of his ordinary revenue; and, according to the usual way in those, and even in much later times, of farming the revenue, he let them out usually to the Dominican friars;' Massingberd, Hist. Eng. Reformation, p. 126.
THE PARDONERES TALE.

1. 345. 'To colour my devotion with.' For saffron, MS. Harl. reads savore. Tyrwhitt rightly prefers the reading saffron, as 'more expressive, and less likely to have been a gloss.' And he adds—'Saffron was used to give colour as well as flavour.' For example, in the Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 275, we read of 'capon that ben coloured with saffron.' And in Winter's Tale, iv. 3. 48, the Clown says—'I must have saffron to colour the warden-pies.' Cf. Sir Thopas, Group B, l. 1920. As to the position of with, cp. Sq. Ta. 471, 641.

1. 346. According to Tyrwhitt, this line is, in some MSS., replaced by three, viz.—

'In every village and in every town,
This is my term, and shall, and ever was,
Radix malorum est cupiditas?'

1. 347. Cristal stones, evidently hollow pieces of crystal in which relics were kept; so in the Prologue, l. 700, we have—

'And in a glas he hadde pigges bones.'

1. 348. Cloutes, rags, bits of cloth. 'The origin of the veneration for relics may be traced to Acts xix. 12. Hence clouts, or cloths, are among the Pardoner's stock;' note in Bell's edition.

1. 349. Reliks. In the Prologue, we read that he had the Virgin Mary's veil and a piece of the sail of St. Peter's ship. Below, we have mention of the shoulder-bone of a holy Jew's sheep, and of a miraculous mitten. See Heywood's impudent plagiarism from this passage in his description of a Pardoner, as printed in the note to l. 701 of Dr. Morris's edition of Chaucer's Prologue. See also a curious list of relics in Chambers' Book of Days, i. 587; and compare the humorous descriptions of the pardoner and his wares in Sir David Lyndesay's Satyre of the Three Estates, ll. 2037-2121.

1. 350. Latoun. The word latten is still in use in Devon and the North of England for plate tin, but as Halliwell remarks, that is not the sense of latoun in our older writers. It was a kind of mixed metal, much resembling brass both in its nature and colour. It was used for helmets (Rime of Sir Thopas, B. 2067), lavers (P. Pl. Crede, 196), spoons (Nares), sepulchral memorials (Way in Prompt. Parv.), and other articles. Todd, in his Illustrations of Chaucer, p. 350, remarks that the escutcheons on the tomb of the Black Prince are of laton over-gilt, in accordance with the Prince's instructions; see Nichols's Royal Wills, p. 67. He adds—'In our old Church Inventories a cross of laton frequently occurs.' See Prol. 699.

1. 351. The expression 'holy Jew' is remarkable, as the usual feeling in the middle ages was to regard all Jews with abhorrence. It is suggested, in a note to Bell's edition, that it 'must be understood of some Jew before the Incarnation.' Perhaps the Pardoner wished it to be understood that the sheep was once the property of Jacob; this would help to give force to l. 365. Cp. Gen. xxx.

The best comment on the virtues of a sheep's shoulder-bone is afforded by a passage in the Persones Tale (De Ira), where we find—'Swering sodenly without avisement is also a grete sinne. But let us go now to that horrible swering of adiuiration and conjuration, as don thise false enchauntours and nigromancers in basins ful of water, or in a bright sword, in a cercle, or in a fire, or in a sholdre-bone of a shepe; &c. Sir David Lyndesay inserts a cow's horn and a cow's tail in his list of pardoners relics; cp. note to l. 349 above.

In Part I of the Records of the Folk-lore Society is an article by Mr. Thoms on the subject of divination by means of the shoulder-bone of a sheep. He shews that it was still practised in the Scottish Highlands down to the beginning of the present century, and that it is known in Greece. He further cites some passages concerning it from some scarce books; and ends by saying—'let me refer any reader desirous of knowing more of this wide-spread form of divination to Sir H. Ellis's edition of Brand's Popular Antiquities, iii. 179, ed. 1842, and to much curious information respecting Spatulamancia, as it is called by Hartlieb, and an analogous species of divination ex anserino sterno, to Grimm's Deutsche Mythologie, 2nd ed. p. 1067.'

l. 355. The sense is—'which any snake has bitten or stung.' The reference is to the poisonous effects of the bite of an adder or venomous snake. The word worm is used by Shakespeare to describe the asp whose bite was fatal to Cleopatra; and it is sometimes used to describe a dragon of the largest size. In Icelandic, the term 'miðgarðsormr,' lit. worm of the middle-earth, signifies a great sea-serpent encompassing the entire world.

l. 363. Fastinge. This word is spelt with a final e in all seven MSS.; and as it is emphatic and followed by a slight pause, perhaps the final e should be pronounced. Cp. A.S. feastende, the oldest form of the present participle.

It is not, perhaps, absolutely essential to the metre, for the word may be pronounced fasting, with an accent on the first syllable, thus making the first foot consist of but one syllable. See other examples of this in my Preface to the Prioresses Tale, p. lxiii (or p. lxiv, 2nd ed.).

l. 366. For heleth, MS. Hl. has kelith, i.e. cooleth.

l. 379. The final e in sinne must not be elided; it is preserved by the caesura. Besides, e is only elided before h in the case of certain words; see Pref. to Prioresses Tale, p. liv (or p. lv, 2nd ed.).

l. 387. Asoille, absolve. In Michelet's Life of Luther, tr. by W. Hazlitt, chap. ii, there is a very similar passage concerning Tetzel, the Dominican friar, whose shameless sale of indulgences roused Luther to his famous denunciations of the practice. Tetzel 'went about from town to town, with great display, pomp, and expense, hawking the commodity [i.e. the indulgences] in the churches, in the public streets, in taverns and ale-houses. He paid over to his employers as little as possible, pocketing the balance, as was subsequently proved against him. The faith of the buyers diminishing, it became necessary to exaggerate to the fullest extent the merit of the specific . . . . The intrepid Tetzel stretched his rhetoric to the very uttermost bounds of amplification. Daringly piling one lie upon another, he set forth, in reckless display, the long list of evils which this panacea could cure. He did not content himself with enumerating known sins; he set his foul imagination to work, and invented crimes, infamous atrocities, strange, unheard of, unthought of; and when he saw his auditors stand aghast at each horrible suggestion, he would calmly repeat the burden of his song:—Well, all this is expiated the moment your money chinks in the pope's chest.' This was in the year 1517.

1. 390. An hundred mark. A mark was worth about 13s. 4d., and 100 marks about £66 13s. 4d. In order to make allowance for the difference in the value of money in that age, we must at least multiply by ten; or we may say in round numbers, that the Pardonier made at least £700 a year. We may contrast this with Chaucer's own pension of twenty marks, granted him in 1367, and afterwards increased till, in the very last year of his life, he received in all, according to Sir Harris Nicolas, as much as £61 13s. 4d. Even then his income did not quite attain to the hundred marks which the Pardonier gained so easily.

1. 397. Downe, a pigeon; lit. a dove. Chaucer, in the Milleres Tale, has a line very like this, viz.—

'As any swallow sitting on a berne.'

1. 405. Blakeberyed. The line means—'Though their souls go a-blackberrying;' i.e. wander wherever they like. This is a well-known crucx, which all the editors have given up as unintelligible. I have been so fortunate as to obtain the complete solution of it, which was printed in Notes and Queries, 4 S. x. 222, xii. 45, and again in my preface to the C-text of Piers the Plowman, p. lxxxvii. The simple explanation is that, by a grammatical construction which was probably really due (as will be shewn) to an error, the verb go could be combined with what was apparently a past participle, in such a manner as to give the participle the force of a verbal substantive. In other words, instead of saying 'he goes a-hunting,' our forefathers sometimes said 'he goes a-hunted.' The examples of this use are at least six. The clearest is in Piers Plowman, C. ix. 138, where we read of 'folk that gon a-begged,' i.e. folk that go a-begging. In Chaucer, we not only have an instance in the present passage, but another in the Wyf of Bath’s Tale, Group D, l. 354, where we have ‘to gon a-caterwaved,’ with the sense of ‘to go a-catervauling;’ and it is a fortunate circumstance that in both these cases the unusual forms occur at the end of a line, so that the rime has preserved them from being tampered with. Gower (Conf. Amant. bk. i. ed. Chalmers, pp. 32, 33, or ed. Pauli, i. 110) speaks of a king of Hungary riding out ‘in the month of May,’ adding—

1. 397.

‘This king with noble puruieance
Hath for him-selfe his chare [car] arayed, Wherein he wolde ryde amayed,’ &c.

that is, wherein he wished to ride a-Maying. Again (in bk. v, ed. Chalmers, p. 124, col. 2, or ed. Pauli, ii. 132) we read of a drunken priest losing his way:—

‘This prest was dronke, and goth a-strayed;’
i.e. he goes a-straying, or goes astray.

The explanation of this construction I take to be this; the -ed was not really a sign of the past participle, but a corruption of the ending -eth (A.S. -æð) which is sometimes found at the end of a verbal substantive. Hence it is that, in the passage from Piers Plowman above quoted, one of the best and earliest MSS. actually reads ‘folk that gon a-beggeth.’ And again, in another passage (P. Pl. C. ix. 246) is the phrase ‘gon abrybeth,’ or, in some MSS., ‘gon abrybed,’ i.e. go a-bribing or go a-thieving, since Mid. Eng. biben often means to rob. This form is clearly an imitation of the form a-hunteth in the old phrase gon a-hunteth or riden an honteth, used by Robert of Gloucester (Specimens of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 14, l. 387)—

‘As he rod an honteth, and par-auntre [h]is hors spurnde.’

Now this honteth is the dat. case of a substantive, viz. of the A. S. huntað or huntod. This substantive would easily be mistaken for a part of a verb, and, particularly, for the past participle of a verb; just as many people at this day are quite unable to distinguish between the true verbal substantive and the present participle in -ing. This mistake once established, the ending -ed would be freely used after the verbs go or ride.

The result is that the present phrase, hitherto so puzzling, is a mere variation for ‘gon a blake-berrying,’ i.e. ‘go a-gathering blackberries,’ a humorous expression for ‘wander wherever they please.’ A not very dissimilar expression occurs in the proverbial saying—‘his wits are gone a-wool-gathering.’

The Pardoner says, in effect, ‘I promise them full absolution; however, when they die and are buried, it matters little to me in what direction their souls go.’

1. 407. Tyrwhitt aptly adduces a parallel passage from the Romaunt of the Rose, l. 5766—
For oft good predication
Cometh of euyl intention.
Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife;’ Phil. i. 15.
1. 413. In Piers Plowman (B-text), v. 87, it is said of Envy that—‘Eche a worde that he warpe was of an addres tonge.’
Cf. Rom. iii. 13; Ps. cxl. 3.
1. 440. For I teche, because I teach, by my teaching.
1. 441. Wilful pouerte signifies voluntary poverty. This is well illustrated by the following lines concerning Christ in Piers Plowman,
B. xx. 48, 49:—
‘Syth he that wroughte al the worlde was wilfullich nedy,
Ne nener non so nedy ne pouerer deyde.’
Several examples occur in Richardson’s Dictionary in which wilfully has the sense of willingly or voluntarily. Thus—‘If they wylfully would renounce the sayd place and put them in his grace, he wolde vtterlye pardon theyr trespace;’ Fabyan’s Chronicle, c. 114. It even means gladly; thus in Wyclif’s Bible, Acts xxii. 17, we find, ‘britherin resseynden vs wilfulli.’ Speaking of palmers, Speght says—‘The pilgrim travelled at his own charge, the palmer professed wilful poverty.’
The word wilful still means willing in Warwickshire; see Eng. Dialect
1. 445. The context seems to imply that some of the apostles made baskets. So in Piers Plowman, B. xv. 285, we read of St. Paul—‘Poule, after his prechyng panyers he made.’
Yet in Acts xviii. 3 we only read that he wrought as a tent-maker.
However, it was St. Paul who set the example of labouring with his hands; and, in imitation of him, we find an early example of basket-making by St. Arsenius, ‘who, before he turned hermit, had been the tutor of the emperors Arcadius and Honorius,’ and who is represented in a fresco in the Campo Santo at Pisa, by Pietro Laurati, as ‘weaving baskets of palm-leaves;’ whilst beside him another hermit is cutting wooden spoons, and another is fishing. See Mrs. Jameson’s Sacred and Legendary Art, 3rd ed. ii. 757.
1. 448. The best description of the house-to-house system of begging, as adopted by the mendicant friars, is near the beginning of the Sompnour’s Tale. They went in pairs to the farm-houses, begging a bushel of wheat, or malt, or rye, or a piece of cheese or brawn, or bacon or beef, or even a piece of an old blanket. Nothing seems to have come amiss to them.
1. 450. See Prologue, l. 255; and cf. the description of the poor widow at the beginning of the Nonne Prestes Tale.
The Pardoneres Tale.

For some account of the source of this Tale, see the Preface. The account which I here quote as the 'Italian' text is that contained in Novella lxxxii of the Libro di Novelle.

1. 463. In laying the scene in Flanders, Chaucer probably followed an original which is now lost. Andrew Borde, in his amusing Introduction of Knowledge, ch. viii, says:— 'Flanders is a plentyfull countre of fyshe & fleshe & wyld fowle. Ther shal a man be clenyly serued at his table, & well ordred and vsed for meate & drynke & lodgyng. The countre is playn, & somwhat sandy. The people be gentyl, but the men be great drynkers; and many of the women be vertuus and wel dysposyd.' He describes the Fleming as saying—

'I am a Fleming, what for all that,
Although I wyll be dronken other whyles as a rat?
"Buttermouth Flemyng" men doth me call,' &c.

1. 464. Haunteden, followed after; cf. note to l. 547. The same expression occurs in The Tale of Beryn, a spurious (but not ill-told) addition to the Canterbury Tales:

'Foly, I haunted it ever, ther myght no man me let;' l. 2319.

1. 473. Grisly, terrible, enough to make one shudder. It is exactly the right word; see the Glossary. The mention of these oaths reminds us of the admission of my Uncle Toby in Sterne's Tristram Shandy, ch. xi, that 'our armies swore terribly in Flanders.'

1. 474. To-tere, tear in pieces, dismember. Cf. to-rente in Gloss. to Prioresses Tale (Clar. Press). Chaucer elsewhere says—'For Cristes sake swere not so sinnefully, in dismembre of Crist, by soule, herte, bones, and body; for certes it semeth, that ye thinken that the cursed Icwes dismembred him not ynough, but ye dismembre him more;' Persones Tale, De Ira. And see ll. 629-659 below.

'And than Seint Johan seid—"These [who are thus tormented in hell] ben thei that sweren bi Goddes membris, as bi his nayles and other his membris, and thei thus dismembrid God in horrible swerynge bi his limmes;" Vision of Wm. Staunton (a.d. 1409), quoted in Wright's St. Patrick's Purgatory, p. 146. In the Plowman's Tale (Chaucer, ed. 1561, fol. xci) we have—

'And Cristes membres al to-tere
On roode as he were newe yrent.'

Barclay, in his Ship of Fools (ed. Jamieson, i. 97), says—

'Some sweryth armes, naylys, herte, and body,
Terynge our Lord worse than the Jowes hym arayed.'

And again (ii. 130) he complains of swearers who crucify Christ afresh, swearing by ‘his holy membres,’ by his ‘blode,’ by ‘his face, his herte, or by his crone of thorne,’ etc. Todd, in his Illustrations of Chaucer, p. 264, quotes (from an old MS.) the old second commandment in the following form:—

‘II. Thi goddes name and h[e]autte
Thou shalt not take for wel nor wo;
Dismembre hym not that on rode-tre
For the was mad boyth blak and blo.’

477. Tombesteres, female dancers. ‘Sir Perdicas, whom that kinge Alysandre made to been his heire in Greece, was of no kinges blod; his dame [mother] was a tombystere;’ Testament of Love, Book ii. ed. 1561, fol. ccxcvi b.

Tombestre is the feminine form; the A.S. spelling would be tumb-estre; the masc. form is the A.S. tumbere, which is glossed by saltator, i.e. a dancer; the verb is tumbian, to dance, used of Herodias’s daughter in the A.S. version of Mark vi. 22.

On the feminine termination -ster (formerly -estre, or -stre) see the remarks in Marsh’s Lectures on the English Language, printed in (the so-called) Smith’s Student’s Manual of the English Language, ed. 1862, pp. 207, 208, with an additional note at p. 217. Marsh’s remarks are, in this case, less clear than usual. He shews that the termination was not always used as a feminine, and that, in fact, its force was early lost. It is, however, merely a question of chronology. That the termination was originally feminine in Anglo-Saxon, is sufficiently proved by the A.S. version of the Gospels. There we find the word witega frequently used in the sense of prophet; but, in one instance, where it is necessary to express the feminine, we find this accomplished by the use of this very termination. ‘And anna wæs witegystre (another MS. witegestre);’ i.e. and Anna was a prophetess, Luke ii. 36. Similar instances might easily be multiplied; see Dr. Morris’s Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, pp. 89, 90. Thus, washestren (pl.) is used as the translation of lotrices; Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 57. But it is also true that, in the fourteenth century, the feminine force of this termination was becoming very weak, so that, whilst in P. Plowman, B. v. 306, we find ‘Beton the brewestere’ applied to a female brewer, we cannot thence certainly conclude that ‘brewestere’ was always feminine at that period. On the other hand, we may point to one word, spinister, which has remained feminine to this very day.

Dr. Morris remarks that tombestere is a hybrid word; in which I believe he has been misled by the spelling. It is a pure native word, from the A.S. tumbian, but the scribes have turned it from tombestere into tombestre, by confusion with the French tomber. Yet even the Fr. tomber was once spelt tumber (Burguy, Roquefort), being, in fact, a word of Germanic origin. An acrobat can still be called a tumbler;
we find 'rope-dancers and tumblers in Locke; Conduct of the Understanding, § 4. Indeed, the Cambridge MS. has here the true spelling tumbesteris, whilst the Corpus, Petworth, and Lansdowne MSS. have the variations tombisteres and tomblesters.

As to the source of the suffix -ster, it is really a compound suffix, due to composition either of the Aryan suffixes -as and -tar, or of -yans and -tar; cf. Lat. mag-is-ter, min-is-ter, poet-as-ter. The feminine use is peculiar to Anglo-Saxon and to some other Teutonic languages.

1. 478. Fruytesteres, female sellers of fruit; see note to last line.

1. 479. Wafereres, sellers of confectionery, confectioners. The feminine form wafrestre occurs in Piers Plowman, v. 641. From Beaumont and Fletcher we learn that 'wafer-women' were often employed in amorous embassies, as stated in Nares' Glossary, q.v.

1. 483. Holy writ. In the margin of the MSS. E., Hn., Cp., Pt., and Hl. is the note—'Nolite inebriari vino, in quo est luxuria,' quoted from the Vulgate version of Eph. v. 18.

1. 488. 'Herod, (as may be seen by any one) who would consult the "stories" carefully.' The Harleian MS. has the inferior reading story; but the reference is particular, not vague. Peter Comestor (died A.D. 1198) was the author of an Historia Scholastica, on which account he was called 'the maister of stories,' or 'clerk of the stories,' as explained in the note to Piers Plowman, vii. 73 (Clar. Press). The use of the plural is due to the fact that the whole Historia Scholastica, which is a sort of epitome of the Bible, with notes and additions, is divided into sections, each of which is also called 'Historia.' The account of Herod occurs, of course, in the section entitled Historia Evangelica, cap. lxxii; De decollatione ianannis. Cf. Matt. xiv; Mark vi.

1. 492. Senek, Seneca. The reference appears to be, as pointed out by Tyrwhitt, to Seneca's Letters; Epist. Ixxxiii: 'Extende in plures dies illum ebrii habitum: numquid de fururo dubitabis? nunc quoque non est minor, sed brevior.'

1. 496. 'Except that madness when it has come upon a man of evil nature, lasts longer than, does a fit of drunkenness.'

1. 499. 'First cause of our misfortune;' alluding to the Fall of Adam. See l. 505.

1. 501. Bought us agayn, redeemed us; a translation of the Latin redemit. Hence we find Christ called, in Middle English, the Azenbyer. 'See now how dere he [Christ] boughte man, that he made after his owne ymage, and how dere he azenboght us, for the grete love that he hadde to us;' Sir J. Maundeville, Prologue to his Voiage (Specimens of Eng. 1298–1393, p. 165). See l. 766 below.

1. 505. Here, in the margin of MS. E., Hn., Cp., Pt., Hl. is a quotation from 'Hieronymus contra Jovinianum' (i.e. from St. Jerome): 'Quamdiu ieiunavit Adam, in Paradiso fuit; comedit et ejectus est; statim duxit uxorem.' See Hieron. contra Jov. lib. ii. c. 15; ed. Migne, ii. 305.

l. 510. Defended, forbidden. Even Milton has it; see P. Lost, xi. 86. See also l. 590 below.

l. 512. 'O glutony! it would much behove us to complain of thee!' l. 522. In the margin of MSS. E. and Hn. is written the quotation—'Esca ventri, et venter escis. Deus autem et hunc et illam destruet.' For illam, the usual reading of the Vulgate is has; see 1 Cor. vi. 13.

l. 526. Whyte and rede, white wine and red wine; see note to Piers Plowman, B. prol. 228 (Clar. Press).

l. 529. In the margin of MSS. E. and Hn. is written—'Ad Philipenses, capitulo tertio.' See Phil. iii. 18.

l. 537. 'How great toil and expense (it is) to provide for thee!' Chaucer is here addressing man’s appetite for delicacies. Cf. fond, Non. Pr. Tale, 9.

l. 539. Here Chaucer humorously alludes to the famous disputes in scholastic philosophy between the Realists and Nominalists. To attempt any explanation of their language is to become lost in subtleties of distinction. It would seem however that the Realists maintained that everything possesses a substance, which is inherent in itself, and distinct from the accidents or outward phenomena which the thing presents. According to them, the form, smell, taste, colour, of anything are merely accidents, and might be changed without affecting the substance itself. See the excellent article on Substance in the Engl. Cyclopaedia; also that on Nominalists.

According to Chaucer, then, the cooks who toil to satisfy man’s appetite change the nature of the things cooked so effectually as to confound substance with accident. Translated into plain language, it means that those who partook of the meats so prepared, could not, by means of their taste and smell, form any precise idea as to what they were eating. The art is not lost.

l. 547. Haunteth, practises, indulges in; cf. l. 464. In the margin of MSS. E. and Hn. is written—'Qui autem in deliciis est, viuens mortuus est.' This is a quotation from the Vulgate version of 1 Tim. v. 6, but with Qui for quæ, and mortuus for mortua.

l. 549. In the margin of MSS. E. and Hn. is written—'Luxuriosa res vinum, et contumeliosae ebrietas.' The Vulgate version of Prov. xx. 1 agrees with this nearly, but has tumultuosa for contumeliosa. This is of course the text to which Chaucer refers. And see note to B. 771.

l. 554. He means that the drunkard’s stertorous breathing seems to repeat the sound of the word Sampsojn. The word was probably chosen for the sake of its nasal sounds, to imitate a sort of grunt. Pronounce the m and n as in French, but with exaggerated emphasis. So also in l. 572.
NOTES TO GROUP C.

1. 555. See note to the Monkes Tale, Group B, line 3245. In Judges xiii. 4, 7, the command to drink no wine is addressed, not to Samson, but to his mother. Of Samson himself it is said that he was 'a Nazarite,' which implies the same thing; see Numbers vi. 3, 5.

1. 561. In Chaucer's Tale of Melibeus (Six-text, B. 2383) we find—'Thou shalt also eschue the conseling of folk that been dronkelewe; for they can no conseil hyde; for Salomon seith, Ther is no priuette ther-as regneth dronkenesse;' and see B. 776. The allusion is to Prov. xxxi. 4—'Noli regibus, O Lamuel, noli regibus dare uinum; quia nullum secretum est ubi regnat ebrietas.' This last clause is quite different from that in our own version; which furnishes, perhaps, a reason why the allusion here intended has not been perceived by previous editors.

1. 563. Namely, especially. Tyrwhitt's note is as follows: 'According to the geographers, Lepe was not far from Cadiz. This wine, of whatever sort it may have been, was probably much stronger than the Gascon wines, usually drunk in England. La Rochelle and Bordeaux (l. 571), the two chief ports of Gascony, were both, in Chaucer's time, part of the English dominions.'

'Spanish wines might also be more alluring upon account of their great rarity. Among the Orders of the Royal Household, in 1604, is the following (MS. Harl. 293, fol. 162): "And whereas, in tymes past, Spanish wines, called Sacke, were little or noe whit used in our courte, and that in later years, though not of ordinary allowance, it was thought convenient that nolemn ... might have a boule or glas, &c. We understanding that it is now used as common drinke ... reduce the allowance to xii. gallons a day for the court,"' &c. Several regulations to be observed by London vintners are mentioned in the Liber Albus, ed. Riley, pp. 614-618. Amongst them is—'Item, that white wine of Gascoigne, of la Rochele, of Spain, or other place, shall not be put in cellars with Rhenish wines.' See also note to l. 565.

1. 564. To selle, for sale; the true gerund, of which to is, in Anglo-Saxon, the sign. So also 'this house to let' is the correct old idiom, needing no such alteration as some would make. Cf. Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, sect. 290, subsect. 4. Fish Street leads out of Lower Thames Street, close to the North end of London Bridge. The Harleian MS. alone reads Fleet Street, which is certainly wrong. Considering that Thames Street is especially mentioned as a street for vintners (Liber Albus, p. 614), and that Chaucer's own father was a Thames Street vintner, there can be little doubt about this matter. The poet is here speaking from his own knowledge; a consideration which gives the present passage a peculiar interest. Chepe is Cheapside.

1. 565. This is a fine touch. The poet here tells us that some of this strong Spanish wine used to find its way mysteriously into other wines; not (he ironically suggests) because the vintners ever mixed their wines, but because the vines of Spain notoriously grew so close to those of Gascony that it was not possible to keep them apart! Crepeth subtilly = finds its way mysteriously. Observe the humour in the word growing, which expresses that the mixture of wines must be due to the proximity of the vines producing them in the vineyards, not to any accidental proximity of the casks containing them in the vintners' cellars. In fact, the different kinds of wine were to be kept in different cellars, as the Regulations in the Liber Albus (pp. 615–618) shew. 'Item, that no Taverner shall put Rhenish wine and White wine in a cellar together.'

'Item, that new wines shall not be put in cellars with old wines.' 'Item, that White wine of Gascoigne, of la Rochele, of Spain, or other place, shall not be put in cellars with Rhenish wines.' 'Item, that white wine shall not be sold for Rhenish wine.' 'Item, that no one shall expose for sale wines counterfeit or mixed, made by himself or by another, under pain of being set upon the pillory.' But pillories have vanished, and all such laws are obsolete.

l. 570. 'He is in Spain;' i.e. he is, as it were, transported thither. He imagines he has never left Cheapside, yet is far from knowing where he is, as we should say.

l. 571. 'Not at Rochelle,' where the wines are weak.

l. 579. 'The death of Attila took place in 453. The commonly received account is that given by Jornandes, that he died by the bursting of a blood-vessel on the night of his marriage with a beautiful maiden, whom he added to his many other wives; some, with a natural suspicion, impute it to the hand of his bride. Priscus observes, that no one ever subdued so many countries in so short a time. . . . Jornandes, De Rebus Geticis, and Priscus, Excerpta de Legationibus, furnish the best existing materials for the history of Attila. For modern compilations, see Buat, Histoire des Peuples de l'Europe; De Guignes, Hist. des Huns; and Gibbon, capp. xxxiv and xxxv; English Cyclopædia. And see Amédée Thierry, Histoire d'Attila.

Mr. Jephson (in Bell's Chaucer) quotes the account of Attila's death given by Paulus Diaconus, Gest. Rom. lib. xv: 'Qui reuersus ad proprias sedes, supra plures quas habebat uxores, valde decoram, indicto nomine, sibi in matrimonium iuxxit. Ob cuius nuptias profusa conuia exercens, dum tantum uini quantum nunquam antea insimul bibisset, cum supinus quiesceret, erupitione sanguinis, qui ei de naribus solitus erat effluere, suffocatus et extinctus est.'

l. 585. Lamuel, i.e. King Lemuel, mentioned in Prov. xxxi. 1, q.v.; not to be confused, says Chaucer, with Samuel. The allusion is to Prov. xxxi. 4, 5; and not (as Mr. Wright suggests) to Prov. xxiii. In fact, in the margin of MSS. E. and Hn. is written—'Noli uinum dare,' words found in Prov. xxxi. 4. See note to l. 561.

l. 591. Hasard, gambling. In the margin of MSS. E. and Hn. is written—‘Policratici libro primo; Mendaciorum et periuriarum mater est Alea.’ This shews that the line is a quotation from lib. i. [cap. 5] of the Polycraticus of John of Salisbury, bishop of Chartres, who died in 1180. See some account of this work in Prof. Morley’s Eng. Writers, i. 597. ‘In the first book, John treats of temptations and duties and other vanities, such as hunting, dice, music, mimes and minstrelsy, magic and soothsaying, prognosis by dreams and astrology.’ See also the account of gaming, considered as a branch of Avarice in the Ayenbyte of Inwyty, ed. Morris, pp. 45, 46.

1. 603. Stilbon. It should rather be Chilon. Tyrwhitt remarks—‘John of Salisbury, from whom our author probably took this story and the following, calls him Chilon; Polycrat. lib. i. c. 5. “Chilon Lacedæmonius, iungendæ societatis causa missus Corinthum, duces et seniores populi ludentes inuentit in alea. Inflecto itaque negotio reversed est [dicens se nolle gloriam Spartanorum, quorum virtus constructo Byzantio clarescebat, hac maculare infamia, ut dicerentur cum aleatoribus contraxisse societatem.”’ Accordingly, in ver. 12539 [l. 605], MS. C. i [i.e. MS. Camb. Univ. Lib. Dd. 4. 24] reads very rightly Lacedomys instead of Calidone, the common reading [of the old editions]. Our author has used before Lacedomys for Lacedæmon, v. 11692 [Frank. Tale, F 1380].’

In the Petw. MS., the name Stilbon is explained as meaning Mercurius. So, in Liddell and Scott’s Gk. Lexicon, we have ‘στιλβων, -ontos, b, the planet Mercury, Arist. Mund. 2. 9; cf. Cic. Nat. D. 2. 20.’ The explanation is clearly wrong in the present instance, yet it points to the original sense of the word, viz. ‘shining,’ from the verb στιλβευ, to glitter.

1. 608. The first foot has but one syllable, viz. Pley. Atte, for at the. Tyrwhitt oddly remarks here, that ‘atte has frequently been corrupted into at the,’ viz. in the old editions. Of course atte is rather, etymologically, a corruption of at the; Tyrwhitt probably means that the editors might as well have let the form atte stand. If so, he is quite right; for, though etymologically a corruption, it was a recognised form at that date.

1. 621. This story immediately follows the one quoted from John of Salisbury in the note to 1. 603. After ‘societatem,’ he proceeds:—‘Regi quoque Demetrio, in opprobrium puerilis leuitas, tali aurei a rege Parthorum dati sunt.’ What Demetrius this was, we are not told; perhaps it may have been Demetrius Nicator, king of Syria, who was defeated and taken prisoner by the Parthians in 138 B.C., and detained in captivity by them for ten years. This, however, is but a guess. Compare the story told of otr own king, in Shakespeare’s Henry V, Act i. sc. 2.

1. 638. To dryue the day away, to pass the time. The same phrase occurs in Piers Plowman, B. prol. 224, where it is said of the labourers who tilled the soil that they ‘dryuen forth the longe day with Dieu vous saue, Dame emme,’ i.e. amuse themselves with singing idle songs.
1. 633. In the margin of MSS. E., Hn., and Pt. is the quotation 'Nolite omnino iurare,' with a reference (in Hn. only) to Matt. v. The Vulgate version of Matt. v. 34 is—'Ego autem dico uobis, non iurare omnino, neque per caelum, quia thronus Dei est.'

1. 635. In the margin of MSS. E., Hn., and Pt. is written—'Ieremie quarto. Iurabis in veritate, in Iudicio et Iusticia;' see Jer. iv. 2.

There are several points of resemblance between the present passage and one in the Persones Tale (De Ira), part of which has been already quoted in the note to 1. 474. 'Also our Lord Jesu Crist sayth, by the word of seint Mathew: Ne shal ye nat swere in alle manere, neyther by heven, &c. And if so be that the lawe compelle you to swere, than reuleth you after the lawe of god in your swering, as sayth Ieremie; Thou shalt kepe three conditions; thou shalt swere in trouth, in dome, and in righwisenesse, &c. And think wel this, that euyry gret swerer, not compelled lawfully to swere, the plaghe shal not depart fro his hous, while he useth unleful swering. Thou shalt swere also in dome, when thou art constreined by the domesman to witnesse a trouth;' &c. So also Wyclif:—'3it no man schulde swere, nouther for life ne dethe, no but with these thre condiciones, that is, in treuthe, in dome, and in righwisenes, as God sais by the prophet Jeremye;' Works, ed. Arnold, iii. 483.

1. 639. The firste table, i.e. the commandments that teach us our duty towards God; those in the second table teach us our duty to our neighbour.

1. 641. Seconde heste, second commandment. Formerly, the first two commandments were considered as one; the third commandment was therefore the second, as here. The tenth commandment was divided into two parts, to make up the number. See Wyclif's treatise on 'The ten Comaundements;' Works, ed. Arnold, iii. 82. Thus Wyclif says—'The secounde maner maundement of God perteyneth to the Sone. Thou schalt not take the name of thi Lord God in veyn, nepter in word, neiter in lyvyng.' And see note to 1. 474.

1. 643. Rather, sooner; because this commandment precedes those which relate to murder, &c.

1. 646. 'They that understand his commandments know this,' &c.

1. 649. Wyclif says—'For it is written in Ecclesiasticus, the thre and twenti chapitre, there he seith this: A man much sweringe schal be fulfilled with wickidnesse, and veniaunce schal not go away fro his hous;' Works, iii. 84. Chaucer here quotes the same text; see Ecclus. xxiii. 11.

1. 651. So Wyclif, iii. 483—'hit is not leeful to swere by creaturis, ne by Goddys bonys, sydus, naylus, ne armus, or by ony membre of Cristis body, as je moste dele of men usen.'

Tyrwhitt says—'his nayles, i.e. with which he was nailed to the cross. Sir J. Maundeville, c. vii—'And thereby in the walle is the place where the 4 Nayles of our Lord weren hidd; for he had 2 in his hondes, and 2 in his feet: and one of these the Emperoure of Constantynoble made a brydille to his hors, to bere him in bataylle; and thorg th vertue thereof he overcame his enemies," &c. He had said before, c. ii., that "on of the nayles that Crist was naylled with on the cross" was "at Constantynoble; and on in France, in the kinges chapelle."

Mr. Wright adds, what is doubtless true, that these nails 'were objects of superstition in the middle ages.' Notwithstanding these opinions, I am not satisfied that these comments are quite correct. I strongly suspect that swearers did not stop to think, nor were they at all particular as to the sense in which the words might be used. Here, for example, nails are mentioned between heart and blood; in the quotation from Wyclif in the note to 1. 651, we find mention of 'bones, sides, nails, and arms,' followed by 'any member of Christ's body.' Still more express is the phrase used by William Staunton (see note to 1. 474 above) that 'God's members' include 'his nails.' On the other hand, in Lewis's Life of Pecock, p. 155 [or p. 107, ed. 1820], is a citation from a MS. to the effect that, in the year 1420, many men died in England 'emittendo sanguinem per iuncturas et per secessum, scilicet in illis partibus corporis per quas horribiliter inrare consueuerunt, scilicet, per oculos Christi, per faciem Christi, per latera Christi, per sanguinem Christi, per cor Christi precisum, per clauos Christi in suis manibus et pedibus.' A long essay might be written upon the oaths found in our old authors, but the subject is, I think, a most repulsive one.

1. 652. Here Tyrwhitt notes—'The Abbey of Hailes, in Glocestershire, was founded by Richard, king of the Romans, brother to Henry III. This precious relick, which was afterwards called "the blood of Hailes," was brought out of Germany by the son of Richard, Edmund, who bestowed a third part of it upon his father's Abbey of Hailes, and some time after gave the other two parts to an Abbey of his own foundation at Ashrug near Berkhamsted. Hollinshed, vol. ii. p. 275.' 'A vial was shewn at Hales in Glocestershire, as containing a portion of our blessed Saviour's blood, which suffered itself to be seen by no person in a state of mortal sin, but became visible when the penitent, by his offerings, had obtained forgiveness. It was now discovered that this was performed by keeping blood, which was renewed every week, in a vial, one side of which was thick and opaque, the other transparent, and turning it by a secret hand as the case required. A trick of the same kind, more skilfully executed, is still annually performed at Naples.'—Southey, Book of the Church, ch. xii. He refers to Fuller, b. vi. Hist. of Abbeys, p. 323; Burnet, i. 323, ed. 1681. See also the word Hales in the Index to the works published by the Parker Society; and Pilgrimages to Walsingham and Canterbury (by Erasmus), ed. J. G. Nichols, 2nd ed. 1875, p. 88.
1. 653. ‘My chance is seven; yours is five and three.’ This is an allusion to the particular game called hazard, not to a mere comparison of throws to see which is highest. A certain throw (here seven) is called the caster’s chance. This can only be understood by an acquaintance with the rules of the game. See the article Hazard in Supplement to Eng. Cyclopaedia, or in Hoyle’s Games. Cf. Man of Lawes Prologue, B 124; Monkes Tale, B 3851. Compare——‘Not unlike the use of foule gamesters, who having lost the maine by [i.e. according to] true judgement, thinke to face it out with a false oath;’ Lyly’s Euphues and his England (qu. in Halliwell’s edition of Nares, s.v. Main).

1. 656. In the Towneley Mysteries, p. 241, when the soldiers dice for Christ’s garments, one says——

‘I was falsly begyled withe thise byched bones,
Ther cursyd thay be.’

On the following page (p. 242), Pilate addresses a soldier with the words——‘Unbychid, unbayn.’ Unbayn (Icel. ú-beinn) means, literally, crooked; metaphorically, perverse; and is a term of reproach. This suggests that unbychid could be similarly used.

The readings are:—E. Cp. bicched; Ln. beched; Hl. bicched; Hn. Cm. bicche; Pt. and old edd. thilk, thilke (wrongly). Besides which, Tyrwhitt cites bichet, MS. Harl. 7335; beched, Camb. Univ. Lib. Dd. 4. 24; and, from other MSS., bichead, bicchid, bitched, bicche. The general consensus of the MS. and the quotation from the Towneley Mysteries establish the reading given in the text beyond all doubt. Yet Tyrwhitt reads bicchel, for which he adduces no authority beyond the following. ‘Bickel, as explained by Kilian, is talus, ovillus et lusorius; and bickelen, talis ludere. See also Had. Junii Nomencl. n. 213. Our dice indeed are the ancient tesseræ (κόβοι) not tali (ἀστράγαλοι); but, both being games of hazard, the implements of one might be easily attributed to the other. It should seem from Junius, loc. cit., that the Germans had preserved the custom of playing with the natural bones, as they have different names for a game with tali ovilli, and another with tali bubuli.’

I find in the Tauchnitz Dutch Dictionary——‘Bikkel, cockal. Bikken, to play at cockals.’ Here cockal is the old name for a game with four hucklebones (Halliwell), and is further made to mean the hucklebone itself. The same Dutch Dictionary gives——‘Bikken, to notch (the millstone).’

In Wackernagel’s Altdéutsches Handwörterbuch, we find——‘Bickel, Pickel, Spitzhache; Würfel,’ i.e. (1) a pick-axe; (2) a die. Also ‘Bickelspiel, Würfelspiel;’ i.e. a game at dice. Wackernagel refers the etymology to the verb bicken or picken, to pick or peck, which is clearly the same as the Dutch bikken, to notch.

We may safely conclude (1) that the reading bicched is correct;
(2) that the English term bicched boon is equivalent to the Dutch bikkel, Ger. bickel, and means a die. Further, it seems to me a fair conclusion that bicched means pecked or pitted, or notched, in allusion to the spots marked on it by making slight holes on the surface; thus the bicched bones two would mean 'the two spotted bones,' a sufficient equivalent for 'a pair of dice.' Nor is it out of place to observe that picks, in the North of England, means the suit of diamonds at cards; whilst, in French, picque means a spade, also at cards. Whence it is not improbable that picks once meant what we now call pips. According to this hypothesis, bicched is nothing more than a various spelling of picked or pecked. The change from b to p is fairly supported by the German bicke, also spelt picke, a pick-axe (Flügel's Dict.), and by the change in the English word beak as compared with peak; cf. Welsh pîg, meaning both beak and peak. The equivalence of the forms pick and pitch is familiar to all readers of Shakespeare; see Cor. i. 1. 204—'as high As I could pick my lance.' Of course och is the usual fourteenth-century spelling for the later tch, as in picche atwo, to peck in twain, Piers Plowman, B. vi. 105.

Further research confirms the above conclusions, and renders them certain. I quote a few more authorities, for the reader's satisfaction, without by any means exhausting the subject.

Hexham's Dutch Dictionary (ed. 1658) gives:—'Een Bickel, ofte [or] Pickel, a hucklebone, or a die. Bickel, a pounce, or a graver. Bickelen, ofte Pickelen, to play at dice. Bickelen, ofte Bicken, to cutt, pink, or engrave. Een Bickeler, ofte Bicker, a stone-hewer, a stone-carver, or a cutter. Bicken, to cut or carve.' The Icel. pikka means both to pick and to prick. The A. S. picung means a stigma, or mark caused by burning. The German Pickel is explained by Heinsius as 'ein kleines Fleck, ein kleines Geschwür auf der Haut'; and pickeln, he says, is 'santt picken, mit etwas Spitzigem leise berühren.' In Küttnner and Nicholson's German Dictionary I find 'Picken, to peck with the bill, as birds do. Ein Vogel, der sich picket, a bird that picks, pecks, or proins itself.' This last throws a clear light on apiked in Chaucer's Prologue, l. 365.

Perhaps also unbychid may mean unmarked, and therefore useless; this would exactly suit the context. 'Unbychid, unbayn,' useless and perverse.

I hope this long note on a crucial point may be excused.

l. 662. Pryme, about nine o'clock; see notes to Non. Pr. Tale, 35; and to Group B. 2015 (Sir Thopas). Here it means the canonical hour for prayer so called, to announce which bells were rung.

l. 664. A hand-bell was carried before a corpse at a funeral by the sexton. See Rock, Church of Our Fathers, ii. 471; Grindal's Works, p. 136.
THE PARDONERES TALE. 161

1. 666. That oon of them, the one of them; the old phrase for 'one of them.' Knaue, boy.

1. 667. Go bet, lit. go better, i.e. go quicker; a term of encouragement to dogs in the chase. So in the Legend of Good Women (Dido, l. 288) we have—

'The herde of harte founden is anon,

With "heu! go bet! prick thou! let gon, let gon!"'

Halliwell says—'Go bet, an old hunting cry, often introduced in a more general sense. See Songs and Carols, xv; Shak. Soc. Pap. i. 58; Chaucer, C. T. 12601 [the present passage]; Dido, 288; Tyrwhitt's notes, p. 278; Ritson's Anc. Pop. Poetry, p. 46. The phrase is mentioned by [Juliana] Berners in the Boke of St. Alban's, and seems nearly equivalent to go along.' It is strange that no editor has perceived the exact sense of this very simple phrase. Cf. 'Keep bet my good,' i.e. take better care of my property; Shipmannes Tale, third line from the end.

1. 679. This pestilence, during this plague. Alluding to the Great Plagues that took place in the reign of Edward III. There were four such, viz. in 1348–9, 1361–2, 1369, and 1375–6. As Chaucer probably had the story from an Italian source, the allusion must be to the first and worst of these, the effects of which spread nearly all over Europe, and which was severely felt at Florence, as we learn from the description left by Boccaccio. See note to Piers Plowman, B. v. 13 (Clar. Press).

1. 684. My dame, my mother; as in Piers Plowman, B. v. 37.

1. 695. Ahow, vow; to make awow is the old phrase for to vow. Tyrwhitt alters it to a vow, quite unnecessarily; and the same alteration has been made by editors in other books, owing to want of familiarity with old MSS. It is true that the form vow does occur, as, e.g. in P. Plowm. B. prol. 71; but it is no less certain that awow occurs also, and was the older form; since we have oon awow (B. 334), and the phrase 'I make myn awow,' P. Plowman, A. v. 218; where no editorial sophistication can evade giving the right spelling. Equally clear is the spelling in the Prompt. Parv.—'Ahowe, Votum. Ahowyn, or to make awowe, Voveo.' And Mr. Way says—'Ahowe, veu; Palsgrave. This word occurs in R. de Brunne, Wiclif, and Chaucer. The phrase "performed his auowe" occurs in the Legenda Aurea, fol. 47.' Those who are familiar with MSS. know that a prefixed a is often written apart from the word; thus the word now spelt accord is often written 'a corde;' and so on. Hence, even when the word is really one word, it is still often written 'a now;' and is naturally printed a vow in two words, where no such result was intended. Tyrwhitt himself prints min awow in the Knightes Tale, l. 1379, and again this awow in the same, l. 1556; where no error is possible. See more on this word in my note to l. 1 of Chevy Chase, in Spec. of Eng. 1394–1579. I have there said that the form vow does not occur in early writers; I should rather have said, it is by no means the usual form. For the etymology, see the Glossary.

l. 698. Brother, i.e. sworn friend; see Kn. Tale, 273, 289. In l. 704, yboren brother means brother by birth.

l. 713. This ‘old man’ answers to the romito or hermit of the Italian text. Note an old (indefinite), as compared with the oldé (definite) in l. 714.

l. 715. Tyrwhitt, in his Glossary, remarks—‘God you see! 7751. God him see! 4576. May God keep you, or him, in his sight! In Troilus, ii. 85, it is fuller:—God you save and see!’ Gower has—‘And than I bidde, God hir see!’ Conf. Amant. bk. iv (ed. Chalmers, p. 116, col. 2, or ed. Pauli, ii. 96). Cf. ‘now loke the owre lorde!’ P. Plowman, B. i. 207. See also l. 766 below.

l. 727. This is a great improvement upon the Italian tale, which represents the hermit as fleeing from ‘death. ‘Fratelli miei, io fuggo la morte, che mi vien dietro cacciando mi.’

l. 731. Leue moder, dear mother Earth.

l. 734. Cheste. Mr. Jephson (in Bell’s edition) is puzzled here. He takes cheste to mean a coffin, which is certainly the sense in the Clerk’s Prologue, E. 29. The simple solution is that cheste refers here, not to a coffin, but to the box for holding clothes which, in olden times, almost invariably stood in every bedroom, at the foot of the bed. ‘At the foot of the bed there was usually an iron-bound hutch or locker, which served both as a seat, and as a repository for the apparel and wealth of the owner, who, sleeping with his sword by his side, was prepared to protect it against the midnight thief;’ Our English Home, p. 101. It was also called a coffer, a hutch, or an ark. This makes the sense clear. The old man is ready to exchange his chest, containing all his worldly gear, for a single hair-cloth, to be used as his shroud.

l. 743. In the margin of MSS. E., Hn., and Pt. is the quotation ‘Coram canuto capite consurge,’ from Levit. xix. 32. Hence we must understand Agayns in l. 743, to mean before, or in presence of.

l. 748. God be with you is said, with probability, to have been the original of our modern unmeaning Good bye! Go or ride, a general phrase for locomotion; go here means walk. Cp. ‘ryde or go,’ Kn. Tale, 493. Cf. note to l. 866.

l. 771. The readings are:—E. Hn. Cm. an. viiij.; Lm. a. viij.; cp. Pt. Hl. a seuen. The word eighte is dissyllabic; cf. A.S. eahta, Lat. octo. Wel ny an eighte bussheles = very nearly the quantity of eight bushels. The mention of florins is quite in keeping with the Italian character of the poem. Those coins were so named because originally coined at Florence, the first coinage being in 1252; note in Cary’s Dante, Inferno, c. xxx. The value of an English florin was 6s. 8d.; see note to Piers Plowman, ii. 143 (Clar. Press). There is an excellent note on florins in Thynne’s Animadversions on Speght’s Chaucer, ed. Furnivall, p. 45.

1. 781. In allusion to the old proverb—‘Lightly come, lightly go.’ Cotgrave, s.v. Fleute, gives the corresponding French proverb thus:—

‘Ce qui est venu par la fleute s’en retourne avec le tabourin; that the pipe hath gathered, the tabour scattereth; goods ill gotten are commonly ill spent.’ In German—‘wie gewonnen, so zerronnen.’

1. 782. Wende, would have weened, would have supposed. It is the past tense subjunctive.

1. 790. Doon vs honge, lit. cause (men) to hang us; we should now say, cause us to be hanged. ‘The Anglo-Saxons nominally punished theft with death, if above 10d. value; but the criminal could redeem his life by a ransom. In the 9th of Henry I. this power of redemption was taken away, 1108.’ The punishment of theft was very severe in England, till mitigated by Peel’s acts, 9 and 10 Geo. IV. 1829.’—Haydn, s.v. Theft.

1. 793. To draw cuts is to draw lots; see Prologue, 835, 838, 845. A number of straws were held by one of the company; the rest drew one apiece, and whoever drew the shortest was the one on whom the lot fell. The shortest straw was the cut, i.e. the one cut short; cf. Welsh cwtan, to shorten; cwt, short; cwtws, a lot. In France the custom was reversed; the lot fell on him who drew the longest; so that their phrase was—‘tirer la longue paille.’

1. 797. So in the Italian story—‘rechi del pane e del vino,’ let him fetch bread and wine.

1. 806-894. Here Chaucer follows the general sense of the Italian story rather closely, but with certain amplifications.

1. 807. That oon, the one; that other, the other.

1. 819. Conseil, a secret; as in P. Plowman, B. v. 168. We still say—‘to keep one’s own counsel.’

1. 844. So the Italian story—‘Il Demonio ... mise in cuore a costui,’ &c.; the devil put it in his heart.

1. 848. Leue, leave. ‘That he had leave to bring him to sorrow.’

1. 851-878. Of this graphic description there is no trace in the Italian story as we now have it. Cf. Rom. and Juliet, v. i.

1. 860. Al so, as. The sense is—as (I hope) God may save my soul. That our modern as is for als, which is short for also, from the A.S. eall-swé, is now well known. This fact was doubted by Mr. Singer, but Sir F. Madden, in his Reply to Mr. Singer’s remarks upon Havelok the Dane, accumulated such a mass of evidence upon the subject as to set the question at rest for ever. It follows that as and also are doublets, or various spellings of the same word.
1. 865. Sterue, die; A. S. steorfan. The cognate German sterben retains the old general sense. See l. 888 below.

1. 866. Goon a paas, walk at an ordinary foot-pace; so also, a litel more than paas, a little faster than at a foot-pace, Prol. 825. Cotgrave has—‘Aller le pas, to pace, or go at a foot-pace; to walk fair and softly, or faire and leisurely.’ Nat but, no more than only; cf. North of England nobbut. The time meant would be about twenty minutes at most.

1. 888. In the Italian story—‘amendue caddero morti,’ both of them fell dead.

1. 889. Auncen, Avicenna; mentioned in the Prologue, l. 432. Avicenna, or Ibn-Sina, a celebrated Arabian philosopher and physician, born near Bokhara A.D. 980, died A.D. 1037. His chief work was a treatise on medicine known as the Canon (‘Kitâb al-Kânûn fi'l-Tibb,’ that is, ‘Book of the Canon in Medicine’). This book, alluded to in the next line, is divided into books and sections; and the Arabic word for ‘section’ is in the Latin version denoted by fen, from the Arabic fann, a part of any science. Chaucer’s expression is not quite correct; he seems to have taken canon in its usual sense of rule, whereas it is really the title of the whole work. It is much as if one were to speak of Dante’s work in the terms—‘such as Dante never wrote in any Divina Commedia nor in any canto.’ Lib. iv. Fen i of Avicenna’s Canon treats ‘De Venenis.’

1. 895. Against this line is written, in MS. E. only, the word ‘Auctor;’ to shew that the paragraph contained in ll. 895-903 is a reflection by the author.

1. 897. The final e in glutonye is preserved by the caesural pause; but the scansion of the line is more easily seen by suppressing it suppressed. Hence in order to scan the line, suppress the final e in glutonye, lay the accent on the second u in luxurie, and slur over the final -ie in that word. Thus—

O glút | ony’ | luxú | rie and háś | ardrýé ||

1. 904. Good men is the common phrase of address to hearers in old homilies, answering to the modern ‘dear brethren.’ The Pardoner, having told his tale (after which Chaucer himself has thrown in a moral reflection), proceeds to improve his opportunity by addressing the audience in his usual professional style; see l. 915.

1. 907. Noble, a coin worth 6s. 8d., first coined by Edward III. about 1339. See note to P. Plowman, B. iiii. 45 (Clar. Press).

1. 908. So in P. Plowman, B. prol. 75, it is said of the Pardoner that he ‘raughte with his ragman [bull] rynges and broches.’

1. 910. Cometh is to be pronounced Com’th, as in Prol. 839; so also in l 925 below.

1. 920. Male, bag; see Prol. 694.
The first two syllables in perauenture are to be very rapidly pronounced; it is not uncommon to find the spelling peraunter, as in P. Plowman, B. xi. 10.

1. 945. Ye, for a grote, yea, even for a groat, i.e. 4d.

1. 946. Have I, may I have; an imprecation.

1. 947. So theech, a colloquialism for so thee ich, so may I thrive.

The Host proceeds to abuse the Pardoner in not very decent terms.

1. 962. Ryght enough, quite enough; ryght is an adverb. Cf. I. 960.

Notes to the Second Nonnes Tale (Group G).

For general remarks on this Tale, see the Preface.

Prologue. This consists of twelve stanzas, and is at once divisible into three parts.

(1) The first four stanzas, the idea of which is taken from Jehan de Vignay’s Introduction to his French translation of the Legenda Aurea. This Introduction is reprinted at length, from the Paris edition of 1513, in the Originals and Analogues published by the Chaucer Society, pt. ii. p. 190.

(2) The Invocation to the Virgin, in stanzas 5-11; see note to ll. 29, 36.

(3) An Envoy to the reader, in stanza 12; see note to I. 78.

Line 1. Jehan de Vignay attributes the idea of this line to St. Bernard. He says—‘Et pour ce que oysiuete est tant blasme que sainct Bernard dit qu’elle est mere de truffes [mother of trifles], marrastre de vertus:... et fait estaindre vertu et nourrir orgueil, &c. Chaucer says again, in his Persones Tale (De Accidia)—‘And though that ignorance be the mother of all harms, certes, negligence is the noircie.’

1. 2. Ydlenesse, idleness; considered as a branch of Sloth, which was one of the Seven Deadly Sins. See Chaucer’s Persones Tale, De Accidia.

1. 3. Chaucer took this idea from the Romaunt of the Rose; see ll. 528-594 of the English version, where a lover is described as knocking at the wicket of a garden, which was opened by a beautiful maiden named Idleness. He afterwards repeated it in the Knightes Tale, I. 1082; and again in the Persones Tale (De Accidia)—‘Than cometh ydlenesse, that is the yate [gate] of all harmes. ... Certes heuen is yeuen to hem that will labour, and not to ydel folke.’

1. 4. To eschue, to eschew; the gerund. The sentence really begins with l. 6, after which take the words to eschue; then take ll. 1-3, followed by the rest of l. 4 and by l. 5.

1. 7. Jehan de Vignay’s Introduction begins thus: ‘Monseigneur sainct hierosme dit ceste auctorite—“Fays tonsours aucune chose de bien, que le dyable ne te trouve oyseux.”’ That is, he refers us to St. Jerome for the idea. We are reminded, too, of the familiar lines by Dr. Watts—

‘For Satan finds some mischief still
For idle hands to do.’

1. 8. Cf. Persones Tale (de Accidia)—‘An idel man is like to a place that hath no walles, theras deuiles may enter on euery side.’

1. 14. Cf. Pers. Tale (de Accidia)—‘Ayenst this roten sinne of accidie and slouthe shulde men exercise hemself, and use hemself to do good werkes;’ &c. ‘Laborare est orare’ was the famous motto of St. Bernard.

1. 15. Though men dradden never; even if men never feared.

1. 17. Rotten, rotten; the Harleian MS. reads rote of; i.e. root of. Yet roten seems right; observe its occurrence in the note to l. 14 above.

1. 19. ‘And (men also) see that Sloth holds her in a leash, (for her) to do nothing but sleep, and eat and drink, and devour all that others obtain by toil.’ The reading hir refers to Idleness, which, as I have before explained, was a branch of Sloth, and was personified by a female. See notes to ll. 2 and 3 above. Tyrwhitt has hem, which is not in any of our seven MSS.

1. 21. Compare Piers Plowman, B. prol. 21, 22—

‘In settyng and in sowyng ‘ swoken ful harde,
And wonnen that wastours ‘ with glotonye destruyeth.’

1. 25. After the legende, following the Legend; i.e. the Legenda Aurea. A very small portion is wholly Chaucer’s own. He has merely added a line here and there, such as ll. 489-497, 505-511, 535, 536. At l. 346 he begins to be less literal; see notes to 380, 395, 443.

1. 27. St. Cecilia and St. Dorothea are both depicted with garlands. Mrs. Jameson tells us how to distinguish them in her Sacred and Legendary Art, 3rd ed. 591. She also says, at p. 35—‘The wreath of roses on the brow of St. Cecilia, the roses or fruits borne by St. Dorothea, are explained by the legends.’ And again, at p. 36—‘White and red roses expressed love and innocence, or love and wisdom, as in the garland with which the angels crown St. Cecilia.’ Red was the symbol of love, divine fervour, &c.; white, of light, purity, innocence, virginity. See ll. 220, 244, 279. The legend of St. Dorothea forms the subject of Massinger’s Virgin Martyr.

1. 29. Virgines must be a trisyllable here; such words are often shortened to a dissyllable. The word thou is addressed to the Virgin Mary. In the margin of MSS. E. and Hn. is written—‘Innocatio ad Mariam.’
1. 30. Speaking of St. Bernard, Mrs. Jameson says—‘One of his most celebrated works, the Missus est, was composed in her honour [i.e. in honour of the Virgin] as Mother of the Redeemer; and in eighty Sermons on texts from the Song of Solomon, he set forth her divine perfection as the Selected and Espoused, the type of the Church on earth;’ Legends of the Monastic Orders, 2nd ed. p. 144.

See a further illustration of the great favour shewn by the Virgin to St. Bernard at p. 142 of the same volume; and, at p. 145, the description of a painting by Murillo, quoted from Stirling’s Spanish Painters, p. 914. See also Dante, Paradiso, xxxi. 102.

1. 32. Confort of us wrecches, comfort of us miserable sinners; see note to 1. 58.

Do me endyte, cause me to indite.

1. 34. Of the feend, over the Fiend. Tyrwhitt reads over for of, but it is unnecessary. Accent victorie on the o.

1. 36. Lines 36-51 are a free translation of a passage in Dante’s Paradiso, Canto xxxiii. ll. 1-21; and are quoted in the notes to Cary’s translation.

1. 36. Vergine madre, figlia del tuo Figlio,
1. 39. Umile ed alta più che creatura,
   Termine fisso d’eterno consiglio,
   Tu se’ colei che l’ umana natura
1. 40, 41. Nobilitasti si, che il suo Fattore
1. 41, 42. Non disdegnò di farsi sua fattura.
1. 43. Nel ventre tuo si raccese l’amore,
1. 44. Per lo cui caldo nell’ eterna pace
   Così è germinato questo fiore.
   Qui sei a noi meridiana face
   Di caritade, e giuso, intra i mortali,
   Sè’ di speranza fontana vivace.
   Donna, se’ tanto grande, e tanto vali,
   Che qual vuol grazia, e a te non ricorre,
   Sua disianza vuol volar senz’ ali.
1. 53, 54. La tua benignità non pur soccorre
1. 53, 54. A chi dimanda, ma molte fiate
1. 55, 56. Liberamente al dimandar precorre.
1. 51. In te misericordia, in te pietate,
1. 50. In te magnificenza, in te s’aduna
   Quatunque in creatura è di bontate.’

The numbers at the side denote the corresponding lines. I add a literal prose rendering of the above passage:

Virgin mother, daughter of thy Son,
Lowly and yet exalted more than (any other) creature,
Fixed limit of the eternal counsel,
Thou art she who didst so ennoble
Human nature, that its Maker
Disdained not to become His own creation.
Within thy womb love was so rekindled,
By the heat whereof, in eternal peace,
This flower has thus budded.
Here art thou to us the meridian torch
Of love, and beneath, among mortals,
Thou art the living fountain of hope.
Lady! thou art so great, and art of such avail,
That whoso desires grace, and does not resort to thee,
His desire endeavours to fly without wings.
Thy benignity not only brings succour
To him who prays for it, but many times
Bountifully foreruns the prayer.
In thee is 'mercy, in thee is pity,
In thee is munificence, in thee is united Whatever excellence is in a created being.

1. 40. Nobledest, didst ennoble; Dante's 'nobilitasti.'

1. 42. The translation is inexact. Dante says—'that its Maker (i.e. the Maker of human nature) did not disdain to become His own creature,' i.e. born of that very human nature which He had Himself created. Cf. l. 49.

1. 45. 'That is, Lord and Guide of the threefold space;' i.e. of the three abodes of things created, viz. the earth, the sea, and the heavens.

1. 46. Out of relees, without release, i.e. without relaxation, without ceasing. Out of means without, as is clear from Prol. 487; Kn. Tale, 283; and relees means acquittance (O. Fr. relais); see Cler. Tale, E. 153, and Relesse in Gloss. Index to Prioresses Tale, &c. There has been some doubt about the meaning of this phrase, but there need be none; especially when it is remembered that to release is another form of to relax, so that relees = relaxation, i.e. slackening. The idea is the same as that so admirably expressed in the Prolog im Himmel to Goethe's Faust.

1. 50. Assembled is in thee, there is united in thee; cf. Dante—'in te s'aduna.' This stanza closely resembles the fourth stanza of the Prioresses Prologue, B. 1664–1670; see Prioresses Tale, p. 10.

1. 52. Sonne. By all means let the reader remember that sonne was probably feminine in English in Chaucer's time, as it is in German, Dutch, and Icelandic to this day. It will be found, however, that Chaucer commonly identifies the sun with Phoebus, making it masculine; see Prol. 8, Kn. Tale 635. Still, there is a remarkable example of the old use in the first rubric of Part ii. of Chaucer's Astrolabie—'To fynde the degree in which the sonne is day by day, after hir cours a-bowte.' So again, in Piers Plowman, B. xviii. 243—'And lo! how the sonne gan louke her lighte in herself?
THE SECOND NONNES TALE.

1. 56. Her lyues leche, the physician of their lives (or life).

1. 58. Flemed wrecche, banished exile. The proper sense of A. S. wracca is an exile, a stranger; and thence, a miserable being. an exile. The phrase 'fleming of wrecches,' i.e. banishment of the miserable, occurs in Chaucer's Troilus, iii. 935 (ed. Tyrwhitt). And see above. B. 460.

Galle, bitterness. There is probably an allusion to the name Mary, and to the Hebrew mar, fem. mărâh, bitter. Cf. Exod. xv. 23; Acts viii. 23; Ruth i. 20. Cf. Chaucer's A B C, l. 50.

1. 59. Womman Cananee, a translation of mulier Chananæa in the Vulgate version of Mat. xv. 22. Wyclif calls her 'a womman of Canan.'

1. 60. Compare Wyclif's version—'for whelpis eten of the crummes that fallen doun fro the bord of her lordis;' Mat. xv. 27.

1. 62. Sone of Eue, son of Eve, i.e. the author himself. This, as Tyrwhitt remarks (Introd. Discourse, note 30), is a clear proof that the Tale was never properly revised to suit it for the collection. The expression is unsuitable for the supposed narrator, the Second Nun.

1. 64. See James ii. 17.

1. 67. Ful of grace; alluding to the phrase 'Aue gratia plena' in Luke i. 28.

1. 68. Aduócat, accented on the penultimate.

1. 69. Ther as, where that. Osanne, Hosanna, i.e. 'Save, we pray,' from Ps. cxxviii. 25. See Concise Dict. of the Bible.

1. 70. The Virgin Mary was said to have been the daughter of Joachim and Anna; see the Protevangelion of James, and the Legenda Aurea, cap. cxxi—'De natiuitate beatae Mariae virginis.'

1. 78. Reden, read. This is still clearer proof that the story was not originally meant to be narrated. Cf. note to l. 62.

1. 82. Him, i.e. Jacobus Januensis; see the Preface. At the, &c., out of reverence for the saint.

1. 83. Hir legende, her (St. Cecilia's) legend as told in the Aurea Legenda.

1. 84. The five stanzas in ll. 85-119 really belong to the Legend itself, and are in the original Latin. Throughout the notes to the rest of this Tale I follow the 2nd edition of the Legenda Aurea, cap. clxix, as edited by Dr. Th. Grässe; Leipsic, 1850.

1. 87. Several of the Legends of the Saints begin with ridiculous etymologies. Thus the Legend of S. Valentine (Aur. Leg. cap. xlii) begins with the explanation that Valentinus means valorem tenens, or else valens tyro. So here, as to the etymology of Cæcilia, we are generously offered five solutions, all of them being wrong. As it is hopeless to understand them without consulting the original, I shall quote as much of it as is necessary, arranged in a less confused order. The true etymology is, of course, that Cæcilia is the feminine of Cæcilius, a name borne by members of the Cæcilia gens, which claimed descent from Cæculus, an ancient Italian hero, son of Vulcan, who is said to have founded Præneste. Cæculus, probably a nickname, can hardly be other than a mere diminutive of cacus, blind. The legendary etymologies are right, accordingly, only so far as they relate to cacus. Beyond that, they are strange indeed.

The following are the etymologies, with their reasons.

(1) Cæcilia = coeli lilium (sic), i.e. heuenes lilie. Reasons:—'Fuit enim coeleste lilium per virginitatis pudorem; uel dicitur liliun, quia habuit candorem munditiae, uiorem conscientiae, odorem bonae famae.' See ll. 87-91. Thus grene (= greenness) translates uiorem.

(2) Cæcilia = caecis uiia, i.e. the way to blynde, a path for the blind. Reason:—'Fuit enim caecis uiia per exempli informationem.' See ll. 92, 93.

(3) Cæcilia is from coelum and lyia. 'Fuit enim ... coelum per iugem contemplationem, lyia per assiduam operationem.' Here lyia is the same as Lia, which is the Latin spelling of Leah in the Book of Genesis. It was usual to consider Leah as the type of activity, or the active life, and Rachael as the type of the contemplative life.

(4) Cæcilia, 'quasi caecitate carens.' This is on the celebrated principle of 'lucus a non lucendo.' Reason:—'fuit caecitate carens per sapientiae splendorem.' See ll. 99-101.

(5) 'Uel dicitur a coelo et leos, i.e. populus.' Finally, recourse is had to Greek, viz. Gk. λεος, the Attic form of λαος. Reason:—'fuit et coelum populi, quia in ipsa tamquam in coelo spirituali populus ad imitandum intuetur coelum, solem, lunam, et stellas, i.e. sapientiae perspicacitatem, fidei magnanimitatem et uirtutum uarietatem.' See ll. 102-112.

ll. 113-118. Chaucer has somewhat varied the order; this last stanza belongs in the Latin to derivation (3), though it may serve also for derivation (5). It is probably for this reason that he has reserved it. The Latin is—'Uel dicitur coelum, quia, sicut dicit Ysidorus, coelum philosophi uoluble, rotundum et ardens esse dixerunt. Sic et ipsa fuit ulubilis per operationem sollicitam, rotunda per perseverantiam, ardens per caritatem succensam.' For the swiftness and roundness of heaven, see note to B 295. The epithet burning is due to quite another matter, not explained in that note. The nine astronomical spheres there mentioned did not suffice for the wants of theology. Hence a tenth sphere was imagined, external to the ninth; but this was supposed to be fixed. This outermost sphere was called the empymraeum (from Gk. ἐμπυρός, burning, which from ἐν, in, and ἡπρ, fire) where the pure element of fire subsisted alone, and it was supposed to be the abode of saints and angels. Milton, in his Paradise Lost, uses the word emptyean six times, ii. 771, iii. 57, vi. 833, vii. 73. 633, x. 321; and the word emptreal eleven times.

1. 120. For some account of St. Cæcilia, see the Preface.

1. 133. An heyre, a hair shirt. The usual expression; see P. Plowman, B. v. 66. Lat. text—'cilicio erat induita.'

1. 134. The organs; Lat. 'cantantibus organis.' We should now say 'the organ;' but in old authors the plural form is commonly employed. Sometimes the word organ seems to refer to a single pipe only, and the whole instrument was called 'the organs' or 'a pair of organs,' where pair means a set, as in the phrase 'a peire of bedes;' Ch. Prol. 159. Thus, in a burlesque poem in Reliquiae Antique, i. 81, a porpoise is described as playing on the organ:—'On tho organs playde tho porpas.' In a note to Sir J. Cullum's Hist. of Hawsted, 2nd ed. p. 33, the expression 'pair of organs' is shewn to occur in three accounts, dated 1521, 1536, and 1618 respectively. See another example in Dr. Morris's note to Nonne Prestes Tale, l. 31, where Chaucer uses orgoon as a plural, equivalent to the Lat. organa. On the early meaning of organum, see Chappell's Hist. of Music, i. 327. The invention of organs dates from the third century B.C.; id. i. 325. See Dante, Purg. ix. 144, and the note to Cary's translation. It is worth adding, that another interpretation of organs is equally possible here; it may mean musical instruments of all kinds; since St. Augustine says—'organa dicuntur omnia instrumenta musicorum;' Comment. in Psalm 56; Chappell's Hist. Music, i. 375, note a. In accordance with this view, the French text translates organis by les instrumens.

St. Cecilia is commonly considered the patroness of music; see Dryden's Ode for St. Cécilia's day, and Alexander's Feast, ll. 132-141. But the connection of her with music is not very ancient, as Mrs. Jameson explains. The reason for this connection seems to me clear enough, viz. the simple fact that the word organis occurs in this very passage. The workers at various trades all wanted patron saints, and must in many cases have been driven to select them on very trivial grounds. Thus, because St. Sebastian was shot by arrows, he became the patron saint of archers; and so on. See several examples in Chambers, Book of Days, iii. 388. Besides, St. Cecilia is here represented as singing herself—'in corde soli domino decantabat dicens;' see l. 135.

1. 145. Conseil, a secret; Lat. 'mysterium.' And so in l. 192, and in P. Plowm. B. v. 168; see note to C. 819 above. And, if.

1. 150. Here, her, is a dissyllable in Chaucer whenever it ends a line, which it does six times; see e.g. B. 460; Kn. Tale 1199. This is quite correct, because the A.S. form hre is dissyllabic also.
1. 173. Chaucer has here mistranslated the Latin. It is not said that the Via Appia (which led out of Rome through the Porta Capena to Aricia, Tres Tabernæ, Appii Forum, and so on towards Capua and Brundusium) was situated three miles from Rome; but that Valerian is to go along the Appian Way as far as to the third milestone. 'Uade igitur in tertium milliariurn ab urbe uia quae Appia nuncupatur.'

1. 177. Urbam. St. Urban's day is May 25. This is Urban I, pope, who succeeded Calixtus, A.D. 222. Besides the notice of him in this Tale, his legend is given separately in the Legenda Aurea, cap. lxxvii. He was beheaded May 25, 230, and succeeded by Pontianus.

1. 178. Secre needes, secret necessary reasons; Lat. 'secreta mandata.'

1. 181. Purged you, viz. by the rite of baptism.

1. 186. Seintes buriels, burial-places of the saints; Lat. 'sepulchra martirum.' It is worth observing, perhaps, that the word buriels is properly singular, not plural; cf. A. S. byrigels, a sepulchre, and see the examples in Stratmann. In P. Plowman, B. xix. 142, the Jews are represented as guarding Christ's body because it had been foretold that He should rise from the tomb—

'pat pat blessed body of buriels shulde rise.'

Of course the mistake of supposing s to be the mark of a plural was made in course of time, and the singular form bryel was evolved. This mistake occurs as early as in Wyclif's Bible, IV Kings xxiii. 17; see Way's note in Prompt. Parv. p. 37, note 1. Consequently, it is most likely that Chaucer has made the same mistake here.

There is here a most interesting allusion to the celebrated catacombs of Rome, which are subterranean passages cut in the rock, and were used by the early Christians for the purpose of sepulture. See Chambers, Book of Days, i. 101, 102.

Lolinge, lying hid. In MS. E., the Latin word latitament is written above, as a gloss. This was taken from the Latin text, which has—'intra sepulchra martirum latitament.' Stratmann gives six examples of the use of lotien or lutien, to lie hid. It occurs once in P. Plowman, B. xvii. 102, where outlaws are described as lurking in woods and under banks:

'For outlawes in pe wode and vnder banke lotyeth.'

1. 201. An old man; i.e. an angel in the form of an old man, viz. St. Paul. Cf. note to l. 207.

1. 202. With lettre of gold; Lat. 'tenens librum aureis litteris scriptum.' L. 203 is not in the original.

1. 205. 'When he (Valerian) saw him (the old man); and he (the old man) lifted up him (Valerian); and then he (Valerian) began thus to read in his (the old man's) book.' This is very ambiguous in Chaucer, but the Latin is clear. 'Quem uidens Valerianus prae nimio timore quasi mortuus cecidit, et a sene leuatius sic legit.'
1. 207.

Oo lord, one lord. Tyrwhitt prints on, 'to guard against the mistake which the editions generally have fallen into, of considering o, in this passage, as the sign of the vocative case.' For the same reason, I have printed Oo, as in MS. Pt., in preference to the single o, as in most MSS. Even one of the scribes has fallen into the trap, and has written against this passage—'Et lamentat.' See MS. Cp., in the Six-text edition. The fact is, obviously, that ll. 207–209 are a close translation of Eph. iv. 5, 6. Hence the old man must be St. Paul.

1. 208. Christendom, baptism; Lat. 'baptisma.' See l 217.

1. 216. We must read the before old?, not this or that, because e in the must be elided; otherwise the line will not scan.

1. 223, 224. That oon, the one; sometimes written the ton or the toon. That other, the other; sometimes written the tother. 'The ton' is obsolete; but 'the tother' may still be heard. That is the neuter of the A. S. def. article se, seó, þæt; cf. Germ. der, die, das.

As to the signification of the red and white flowers, see note to l. 27 above.

Compare Act v. sc. 1 of Massinger's Virgin Martyr, where an angel brings flowers from St. Dorothea, who is in paradise, to Theophilus. See note to l. 248 below.

1. 232. For, because; Lat. 'quia.'

1. 236. Afterwards repeated, very nearly, in Kn. Tale, l. 338.

1. 243. Sauour undernom, perceived the scent; Lat. 'sensisset odorem.'

1. 248. Rose. We should have expected roses. Perhaps this is due to the peculiar form of the Latin text, which has—'roseus hic odor et liliorum.'

Compare the words of Theophilus in the Virgin Martyr, v. 1:—

'What flowers are these?
In Diocletian's gardens the most beauteous,
Compared with these, are weeds; is it not February,
The second day she died? frost, ice, and snow
Hang on the beard of winter: where's the sun
That gilds this summer? pretty, sweet boy, say,
In what country shall a man find this garden?'

1. 270. Ll. 270–283 are certainly genuine, and the passage is in the Latin text. It is also in the French version, but it does not appear in the Early English version of the story printed by Mr. Furnivall from MS. Ashmole 43, nor in the English version printed by Caxton in 1483. Tyrwhitt's supposition is no doubt correct, viz. that this passage 'appears evidently to have been at first a marginal observation and to have crept into the [Latin] text by the blunder of some copyist.' He truly observes that these fourteen lines 'interrupt the narrative awkwardly, and to little purpose.'
1. 271. Ambrose. 'Huic miraculo de coronis rosarum Ambrosius attestatur in praefatione, sic dicens, &c. I cannot find anything of the kind in the indices to the works of St. Ambrose.

1. 276. Eek hir chambre, even hir marriage-chamber, i.e. even marriage. Weyue, waive, abandon. Lat. 'ipsum mundum est cum thalamis exsecrata.' Weyue occurs again in some MSS. of Chaucer's Truth, l. 20.

1. 277. Shrifte, confession. Lat. 'testis est Valeriani conjugis et Tiburtii provocata confessio, quos, Domine, angelica manu odoriferis floribus coronasti.' For Valerians, all the MSS. have Cecilies. Whether the mistake is Chaucer's or his scribes', I cannot say; but it is so obviously a mere slip, that we need not hesitate to correct it. The French text is even clearer than the Latin; it has—'et de cest tesmoing valerien son mary et tiburcien son frere.' Besides, the express mention of 'these men' in l. 281 is enough, in my opinion, to shew that the slip was not Chaucer's own; or, at any rate, was a mere oversight.

1. 282. 'The world hath known (by their example) how much, in all truth, it is worth to love such devotion to chastity.' Lat. 'mundus agnonit, quantum ualeat deuotio castitatis;—haec Ambrosius.' This is quoted as St. Ambrose's opinion. The parenthesis ends here.

1. 288. Beste, i.e. void of understanding, as a beast of the field is. Lat. 'pecus est.'

1. 315. And we. Tyrwhitt remarks that we should have been us. But a glance at the Latin text shews what was in Chaucer's mind; he is here merely anticipating the we in l. 318. Lat. 'et nos in illius flammis pariter inuoluemur, et dum quaerimus diuinitatem latentem in coelis, incurremus fuorem exuventem in terris.' The sentence is awkward; but we was intended. The idiom has overridden the grammar.

1. 319. Cecile. This is one of the clearest instances to shew that Chaucer followed the Latin and not the French version. Lat. 'Cui Caecilia;' Fr. 'et valerien dist.' Mr. Furnivall has noted this and other instances, and there is no doubt about the matter.

1. 320. Skilfully, reasonably; the usual meaning at this date. See l. 327.

1. 327. 'And all that has been created by a reasonable Intelligence.'

1. 329. Hath sowled, hath endued with a soul, hath quickened; Lat. 'animauit.'

1. 335. O god, one God. We must suppose this teaching to be included in the mention of Christ in l. 295; otherwise there is no allusion to it in the words of Cecilia. The doctrine had been taught to Valerian however; see l. 207, 208.

There are continual allusions, in the Lives of the Saints, to the difficulty of this doctrine.

1. 338. Chaucer is not quite exact. The Latin says that three things reside in a man's wisdom, the said wisdom being but one. 'Sicut in una hominis sapientia tria sunt, ingenium, memoria et intellectus.' The notion resembles that in a favourite passage from Isidore quoted in Piers Plowman, B. xv. 39, to the effect that the soul (anima) has different names according to its functions. When engaged in remembering, we call it memory (memoria); when in judging, we call it reason (ratio); and so on. Compare the curious illustrations of the doctrine of the Trinity in Piers Plowman, B. xvi. 220-224, xvii. 137-249. The illustration in the text is, as Mr. Jephson points out, by no means a good one.

1. 341. The word Thre stands alone in the first foot.

Thré | persón | es máy | ther ryght | wel bé ||

See note to l. 353.

1. 343. Come, coming, i.e. incarnation; Lat. 'aduentu.' Tyrwhitt read sonde, i.e. sending, message; but incorrectly.

1. 345. Withholde, detained, constrained to dwell; Lat. 'tentus;'
Fr. 'tenu.'

1. 346. Hitherto Chaucer's translation is, on the whole, very close.
Here he omits a whole sentence, and begins to abbreviate the story and alter it to suit himself. See his hint in l. 360.

1. 351. That, who. In MS. E. the word is glossed by—'qui, scilicet Vrbanus.' It is remarkable that the relative who (as a simple relative, without so suffixed) is hardly to be found in English of this date, in the nominative case. The A.S. hwá is only used interrogatively.
'Hwaí (who) appears as a proper relative first in its dative wam or wan in Layamon, ii. 632, iii. 50 [about A.D. 1200]; in its genitive whas and dative wham in Ormulum, 3425, 10370 [about the same date]. The nominative who is found sometimes with a pronominal antecedent in Wycliffe, A.D. 1382-3 (Isaiah i. 10), and becomes common as a full relative in Berners' Froissart, A.D. 1523;' March, Anglo-Saxon Grammar, p. 179.

1. 353. Goddes knyght, God's servant, or rather, God's soldier; see
l. 383, and the note. In the A.S. version of the Gospels Christ's disciples are called 'leorning-cnihtas.' In the Ormulum and in Wyclif cniht or kniht sometimes means a servant, but more commonly a soldier.
Priests are called 'goddes knyghtes' in Piers Plowman, B. xi. 304.
In scanning this line, either lerninge is of three syllables (which I doubt) or else the first syllable in Parfyjt forms a foot by itself; see note to
l. 341 above.

1. 362. Almache; Lat. 'Almachius praefectus.' The reigning emperor was Alexander Severus (A.D. 222-235).

1. 363. Apposed, questioned, examined; written opposed in most MSS., but corrected by Tyrwhitt. Ed. 1532 also has aposed. A similar confusion occurs in the Freres Tale, D. 1597, where only two MSS., viz. Pt. and Ln., have the right spelling appose, as against five others which wrongly read opposen. The right spelling occurs in MSS. of Piers the Plowman, where we find appose, to question, B. iii. 5; apposed, i. 47; apposeden, vii. 138. Skelton has it, in his Colin Clout, 267:—

For that they are not apposed
By inst examinacyon
In connynng and conversacyon.'

Mr. Dyce (note on this line) quotes from Horman—'He was apposed, or examyned of his byleue, De religione appellatus est;' Vulgaria, sig. Dii. ed. 1530. In Prompt. Parv. it is confused with oppose. Wedgwood explains that appose, or pose, lit. to lay near (Fr. apposer), was used in the particular sense of putting specific questions to a candidate for examination; whence the phrase an apposite answer, applied to one that was to the point; see his article on Pose. The shorter form pose occurs in Piers the Plowman, B. xvii. 293.

l. 365. Sacrifyse, sacrifice to the idol. This was the usual test to which Christians were subjected; see note to l. 395. Compare Dan. iii. 14, 18. So in the Virgin Martyr, iv. 2:—

'Bow but thy knee to Jupiter, and offer
Any slight sacrifice; or do but swear
By Caesar's fortune, and—be free!'

l. 367. Thise martirs; note that this is an accusative case.

l. 369. Corniculere, a sort of officer. The note in Bell's edition, that the French version has prevost here, is wrong. The word prevost (Lat. praefectus) is applied to Almachius. Maximus was only a subordinate officer, and is called in the Early Eng. version (MS. Ashmole 43) the 'gailer.' The expression 'Maximo Corniculario' occurs only in the Lives of Valerian and Tiburtius, in the Acta Sanctorum (April 14).

Riddle's Lat. Dict. gives—'Cornicularius, -i. m. a soldier who was presented with a corniculum, and by means of it promoted to a higher rank; hence, an assistant of an officer, Suetonius, Domit. 17; then also in the civil service, an assistant of a magistrate, a clerk, registrar, secretary; Cod. Just.'

'Corniculum, -i. n. (dimin. of cornu). 1. A little horn, Pliny; also, a small funnel of horn, Columella. An ornament in the shape of a horn worn on the helmet, with which officers presented meritorious soldiers; Livy, 10. 44.'

Ducange gives several examples, shewing that the word commonly meant a secretary, clerk, or registrar. Tyrwhitt refers us to Pitiscus, Lex. Ant. Rom. s.v. Cornicularius.

l. 373. 'He got leave for himself from the executioners.' Tormentoures, executioners; Lat. 'carnifices.' See l. 527. Cf. tormentor in Matt. xviii. 34; see Eastwood and Wright's Bible Word-book.
I. 380. Prestes, priests. The original says that pope Urban came himself.
I. 386. Tyrwhitt notes a slight defect in the use of ydoon in I. 386, followed by doon in I. 387. The first six lines in this stanza are not in the original, but are imitated from 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8.
I. 395. ‘This was the criterion. The Christians were brought to the image of Jupiter or of the Emperor, and commanded to join in the sacrifice, by eating part of it, or to throw a few grains of incense into the censer, in token of worship; if they refused, they were put to death. —See Pliny’s celebrated letter to Trajan. Those who complied were termed sacrificati and ihurificati by the canons, and were excluded from the communion for seven or ten years, or even till their death, according to the circumstances of their lapse.—See Bingham’s Antiquities, b. xvi. 4. 5.’—Note in Bell’s edition of Chaucer. Cf. note to I. 365.
This stanza is represented in the original (in spite of the hint in I. 394) by only a few words. ‘Quarto igitur milliario ab urbe sancti ad statuam Iovis ducuntur, et dum sacrificare nollent, pariter decollantur.’
I. 405. To-bete, beat severely; dide him so to-bete, caused (men) to beat him so severely, caused him to be so severely beaten. I have no hesitation in adopting the reading of ed. 1532 here. To-bete is just the right word, and occurs in MSS. Cp., Pt., Ln.; and, though these MSS. are not the best ones, it is clear that to-bete is the original reading, or it would not appear. I give two examples of the use of the word. ‘Ure men hi to-betet,’ i.e. they severely beat our men; Layamon’s Brut, I. 3308. ‘Me to-beat his cheeken, and spette him a schorn;’ men severely beat His cheeks, and spit upon Him in scorn; Ancren Riwe, p. 106. See To-race and To-rente in Gloss. to Chaucer’s Prioresses Tale, &c.; see also Dide in the same. To scan the line, slur over -ius in Almachius, and accent dide.
I. 406. Whippe of leed, i.e. a whip furnished with leaden plummets. Lat. ‘eum plumbatis tamdiu caedii fecit,’ &c.; French text—‘il le fist tant batre de plombees,’ &c.; Caxton—‘he dyd do bete hym with plomettes of leed.’
I. 413. Encense, offer incense to; see note to I. 395.
I. 414. They. Over this word is written, in MS. E.—‘scilicet Ministres.’ The Latin original says that Cecilia converted as many as 400 persons upon this occasion. Hence the expression o voys (one voice) in I. 420.
I. 417. Withouten difference, i.e. without difference in might, majesty, or glory.
I. 430. Lewedly, ignorantly. The ‘two answers’ relate to her rank and her religion, subjects which had no real connection.
I. 434. Lat. ‘de conscientia bona et fide non ficta;’ cf. 1 Tim. i. 5.
1. 437. To dreede, to be feared; the gerund, and right according to the old idiom. We still say—'he is to blame,' 'this house to let.' March, in his Anglo-Saxon Grammar, p. 198, says—'The gerund after the copula expresses what must, may, or should be done.

'Ex. Mannes sumu is to syllanne, the Son of Man must be delivered up, Matt. xvii. 22;' &c.

1. 442. Bigonne, didst begin; the right form, for which Tyrwhitt has begonnest. For the Mid. Eng. biginnen we commonly find onginnen in Anglo-Saxon, and the form for the past tense is—ongan, ongunne, ongan; pl. ongunnon. The form in Middle English is—bigan, bigunne (or bigonenne), bigan; pl. bigunnen (or bigonne). The very form here used occurs in the Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, p. 71. The suffix -st does not appear in strong verbs; cf. Thou sey, B. 848; thou bar, G. 48.

The whole of ll. 443–467 varies considerably from the original, the corresponding passage of which is as follows: 'Cui Almachius: "ab iniuriis caepisti, et in iniuriis perseueras." Caecilia respondit: "iniuria non dicitur quod ubernis fallentibus irrogatur; unde aut iniuriam doce, si falsa locuta sum, aut te ipsum corripe calumniam inferentem, sed nos scientes sanctum Dei nomen omnino negare non possumus; melius est enim feliciter mori quam infeliciter uiuere." Cui Almachius: "ad quid cum tanta superbia loqueris?" Et illa: "non est superbia, sed constantia." Cui Almachius: "infelix, ignoras," &c. (l. 468). However, Chaucer has adopted an idea from this in ll. 473, 475.

1. 463. To scan this, remember that Iuge has two syllables; and accent confus on the first syllable.

1. 485. Lat. 'es igitur minister mortis, non uitae.'

1. 487. Do wey, do away with; Lat. 'depone.' The phrase occurs again in the Milleres Tale; C. T. 3287; ed. Tyrwhitt.

II. 489–497. These lines are wholly Chaucer's own.

1. 490. To scan the line, elide e in suffre, and read philosophre.

1. 492. Spekest; to be read as spekst.

1. 498. Utter yen, outer eyes, bodily eyes. In MS. E. it is glossed by 'exterioribus oculis.' The Latin has—'nescio ubi oculos amiscis; nam quos tu Deos dicis, omnes nos saxa esse uidemus; mitte igitur manum et tangendo disce, quod oculus non uales uidere.'

1. 503. Taste, test, try; Lat. 'tangendo disce.' The word is now restricted to one of the five senses; it could once have been used also of the sense of feeling, at the least. Bottom even ventures on the strange expression—'I trust to taste of truest Thisbe's sight;' Mid. Nt. Dream, v. 1. 280; such is the reading in the first folio.

1. 505–511. This stanza is all Chaucer's own.

1. 515. Bath of flambes rede; Lat. 'in bullicente balneo.'

II. 516–522. The Latin merely has—'Quae quasi in loco frigido permansit, nec modicum saltum sudoris persensit.'
1. 533. Lat. 'eam semiuuam cruentus carnifex dereliquit.'

1. 534. Is went, though only in the (excellent) Cambridge MS., is the right reading; the rest have he wente, sometimes misspelt he went. In the first place, is went is a common phrase in Chaucer; cf. German er ist gegangen, and Eng. he is gone. But secondly, the false rime detects the blunder at once; Chaucer does not rime the weak past tense wente with a past participle like yhent. This was obvious to me at the first glance, but the matter was made sure by consulting Mr. Cromie's excellent 'Ryme-Index.' This at once gives the examples is went, riming with pp. to-rent, E. 1012 (Clerkes Tale); is went, riming with instrument, F. 567 (Sq. Tale); is went, riming with innocent, B. 1730, and ben went, riming with pavement, B. 1869 (Prioresses Tale); all of which may be found in my edition of The Prioresses Tale, &c. Besides this, there are two more examples, viz. be they went, riming with sacrement, E. 1701; and that he be went, riming with sent, A. 3665. On the other hand, we find wente, sente, hente, and to-rente, all (weak) past tenses, and all riming together, in the Monkes Tale, B. 3446. The student should particularly observe an instance like this. The rules of rime in Chaucer are, on the whole, so carefully observed that, when once they are learnt, a false rime jars upon the ear with such discord as to be unpleasantly remarkable, and should be at once detected.

II. 535, 536. These two lines are not in the original.

1. 539. 'She began to preach to them whom she had fostered,' i.e. converted. To foster is here to nurse, to bring up, to educate in the faith; see l. 122 above. The Latin text has—'omnes quos ad fidem conuertat, Urbano episcopo commendauit.' Tyrwhitt makes nonsense of this line by placing the comma after hem instead of after fostred, and other editors have followed him. In MSS. E. and Hn. the metrical pause is rightly marked as occurring after fostred. The story here closely resembles the end of the Prioresses Tale, B. 1801-1855.

1. 545. Do werche, cause to be constructed.

1. 549. Lat. 'inter episcopos sepeluiit.'

1. 550. 'It is now a church in Rome, and gives a title to a cardinal,' note in Bell's edition. In a poem called the Stacyons of Rome, ed. Furnivall, l. 832, we are told that 100 years' pardon may be obtained by going to St. Cecilia's church. Mr. W. M. Rossetti, in a note on this line, says—'The Church of St. Cecilia, at the end of the Trastevere, near the Quay of Ripa Grande, was built on the site of the saint's own house in 230; rebuilt by pope Paschal I. in 821, and dedicated to God and Sts. Mary, Peter, Paul, and Cecilia; and altered to its present form in 1599 and 1725. In the former of these years, 1599, the body of the saint was found on the spot, with a contemporary inscription identifying her: the celebrated statue by Stefano Maderno, now in the church, represents her in the attitude she was discovered lying in. Francino does not name the 100 years indulgence of the text, but plenary indulgence on St. Cecilia's day.'

1. 553. After this line the Latin adds—'Passa est autem circa annos domini CC et XXIII, tempore Alexandri imperatoris. Alibi autem legitur, quod passa sit tempore Marci Aurelii, qui imperauit circa annos domini CCXX.' The confusion of names here is easily explained. Marcus Aurelius died in 180; but Marcus Aurelius Alexander Severus (for such was his title in full) reigned from 212 to 235. The true date is generally considered to be 230, falling within his reign, as it should do.

NOTE TO THE CANON'S YEOMAN'S TALE.

1. 554. The lyf of seint Cecile, i.e. the Second Nun's Tale. This notice is important, because it inseparably links the Canon's Yeoman's Tale to the preceding one.

1. 555. Fyue myle, five miles. Tyrwhitt says that it is five miles 'from some place, which we are now unable to determine with certainty.' He adds that he is in doubt whether the pilgrims are here supposed to be riding from or towards Canterbury; but afterwards thinks that 'the manner in which the Yeman expresses himself in ver. 16091, 2 [i.e. ll. 623, 624] seems to shew that he was riding to Canterbury.'

It is really very easy to explain the matter, and to tell all about it. It is perfectly clear that these two lines express the fact that they were riding to Canterbury. It is even probable that every one of the extant Tales refers to the outward journey: for Chaucer would naturally write his first set of Tales before beginning a second, and the extant Tales are insufficient to make even the first set complete. Consequently, we have only to reckon backwards from Boughton (see l. 556) for a five-mile distance along the old Canterbury road, and we shall find the name of the place intended.

The answer to this is—Ospringe. The matter is settled by the discovery that Ospringe was, as a matter of fact, one of the halting-places for the night of travellers from London to Canterbury. Dean Stanley, in his Historical Memorials of Canterbury, p. 237, quotes from a paper in the Archæologia, xxxv. 461, by Mr. E. A. Bond, to shew that queen Isabella, wife of Edw. II, rested in London on the 6th of June, 1358; at Dartford on the 7th; at Rochester on the 8th; at Ospringe on the 9th; and at Canterbury on the 10th and 11th; and returned, on the 12th, to Ospringe again. See this, more at length, in Mr. Furnivall's Temporary Preface to the Canterbury Tales (Chaucer Soc.), pp. 13, 14.
Mr. Furnivall quotes again from M. Douet-d'Arcq, concerning a journey made by king John of France from London to Dover, by way of Canterbury, in 1360. On June 30, 1360, king John left London and came to Eltham. On July 1, he slept at Dartford; on July 2, at Rochester; on July 3, he dined at Sittingbourne (noted as being 39 miles and three-quarters from London), and slept at Ospringe; and on July 4 came to Canterbury (noted as being 54 miles and a half from London).

These extracts clearly shew (1) that the whole journey was usually made to occupy three or four days; (2) that the usual resting-places were (at least) Dartford, Rochester, and Ospringe; and (3) that Sittingbourne was considered as being about 15 miles from Canterbury.

Now, in passing from Sittingbourne to Canterbury, we find that the distance is divided into three very nearly equal parts by the situations of Ospringe and Boughton, giving five miles for each portion. The chief difficulty is that raised by Tyrwhitt, that the distance from Ospringe to Canterbury, only ten miles, leaves very little to be done on the last day. There is really no objection here worth considering, because we have Chaucer's express words to the contrary. Chaucer says, as plainly as possible, that the pilgrims really did rest all night on the road, at a place which can only be Ospringe; see ll. 588, 589.

Mr. Furnivall also notes (Temp. Pref. p. 29), that Lydgate, in his Storie of Thebes (in Speght's Chaucer, 1602, fol. 353 back, col. 2) makes the pilgrims, on their return-journey, return from Canterbury to Ospringe to dinner:

'And toward morrow, as soon as it was light,
   Every pilgrime, both bet and wors,
   As bad our host, tooke anone his hors,
   When the Sunne rose in the East ful clere,
   Fully in purpose to come to dinere
   Unto Ospring, and breake there our fast.'

Further illustrations might, perhaps, be found; but we scarcely require them.

1. 556. Boughton-under-Blee. Here Blee is the same as the blee in Group H. l. 3, which see. It is now called Blean Forest, and the village is called Boughton-under-Blean, in order to distinguish it from other villages of the same name. I find, in a map, for examples, Boughton Aluph between Canterbury and Ashford, Boughton Malherb between Ashford and Maidstone, and Boughton Monchelsea between Maidstone and Staplehurst.

1. 557. A man, i.e. the Canon. This is an additional pilgrim, not described in the Prologue, and therefore described here in ll. 566-581, 600-655, &c.
The name of Canon, as applied to an officer in the Church, is derived from the Gk. κανών (kanón) signifying a rule or measure, and also the roll or catalogue of the Church, in which the names of the Ecclesiastics were registered; hence the clergy so registered were denominated Canonici or Canons. Before the Reformation, they were divided into two classes, Regular and Secular. The Secular were so called, because they canonized in sæcula, abroad in the world. Regular Canons were such as lived under a rule, that is, a code of laws published by the founder of that order. They were a less strict sort of religious than the monks, but lived together under one roof, had a common dormitory and refectory, and were obliged to observe the statutes of their order. The chief rule for these [regular] canons is that of St. Augustine, who was made bishop of Hippo in the year 395. . . . Their habit was a long black cassock with a white rochet over it, and over that a black coat and hood; from whence they were called Black Canons Regular of St. Augustine.'—Hook's Church Dictionary.

There were several other orders, such as the Gilbertine canons of Sempringham in Lincolnshire, the Præmonstratenses or White Canons, &c. See also the description of them in Cutts's Scenes and Characters of the Middle Ages, p. 19.

I should imagine, from the description of the Canon's house in l. 657, and from the general tenor of the Tale, that Chaucer's Canon was but a secular one. Still, their rule seems to have been less strict than that of the monks.

1. 561. Priked myles three, ridden hard for three miles. The Canon and his yeoman may be supposed to have ridden rather fast for the first two miles; and then, finding they could not otherwise overtake the pilgrims, they took to the best pace they could force out of their horses for three miles more.

1. 562. Yeman, yeoman, attendant, servant. His face was all discoloured with blowing his master's fire (ll. 664–667), and he seems to have been the more honest man of the two. He is the teller of the Tale, and begins by describing himself; l. 720.

1. 565. 'He was all spotted with foam, so that he looked like a magpie.' The word He (like his in l. 566) refers to the Canon, whose clothing was black (l. 557); and the white spots of foam upon it gave him this appearance. The horse is denoted by it (l. 563), the word hors being neuter in the Oldest English. Most MSS. read he for it in l. 563, but there is nothing gained by it.

1. 566. Male tweysfold, a double budget or leathern bag; see Prolo. l. 694.

1. 571. Chaucer tells us that the Pardoner's hood, on the contrary, was not fastened to his cloak; see Prolo. l. 680.

1. 575. 'Rather faster than at a trot or a foot-pace.' Said ironically. Cf. Prolo. 825.
1. 577. Clote-leaf, the leaf of a burdock. Cotgrave has—'Lampourde, f. the Clot or great Burre.' Also—'Glouteron, m. The Clote, Burre Docke, or great Burre.' And again—'Bardane, f. the Clote, burre-dock, or great Burre.'

In the Prompt. Parv. we find—'Clote, herbe; Lappa bardana, lappa rotunda.' In Wyclif's Version of the Bible, Hosea ix. 6, x. 8, we find clote or cloote where the Vulgate version has lappa. In Vergil, Georg. i. 153, we have—'Lappaeque tribulique,' and a note in the Delphin edition, 1813, says—'Lappa, glouteron, bardane, burdock; herba, capitula ferens hamis aspera, quae vestibus praetereuntium adhaerent.' The Glossary to Cockayne's 'Leechdoms' explains A.S. cláte as arctium lappa, with numerous references.

The word is closely related to G. klètte, a bur, a burdock, O. H. G. chletta, chletto, Mid. Du. kladdé, a bur (see Hexham); whence O. F. gleton, F. glouteron (see above). It is clear that clote originally meant the bur itself, just as the name of bur-dock has reference to the same. The clote is, accordingly, the Arctium lappa, or Common Burdock, obtaining its name from the clotes (i.e. burs or knobs) upon it; and one of the large leaves of this plant would be very suitable for the purpose indicated.

After this we may safely dismiss the suggestion in Halliwell's Dictionary, founded on a passage in Gerarde's Herball, p. 674 D, that the Clote here means the yellow water-lily. We know from Cockayne's 'Leechdoms' that the name cláte seó pe swimman wille (i.e. swimming clote) was sometimes used for that flower (Nuphar lutea), either on account of its large round leaves or its globose flowers; but in the present passage we have only to remember the Canon's haste to feel assured that he might much more easily have caught up a burdock-leaf from the road-side than have searched in a ditch for a water-lily.

1. 578. For swote, to prevent sweat, to keep off the heat. See note to Sir Thopas, B. 2052.

1. 581. Were ful, that might be full, that might chance to be full. Were is the subjunctive, and the relative is omitted.

1. 588. Now, &c.; lately, in the time of early morning.

1. 589. This shews that the pilgrims had rested all night on the road; see note to l. 555, and p. xiii. of Pref. to Prioresses Tale, &c.

1. 599. Ye, yea. There is a difference between ye, yea, and yis, yes. The former merely assents, or answers a simple question in the affirmative. The latter is much more forcible, is used when the question involves a negative, and is often followed by an oath. See note to Specimens of Eng. 1394–1579, ed. Skeat, sect. xvii. (D), l. 22; and note to is in the Glossary to my edition of William of Palerne. See an example of is (yes) after a negative in Piers the Plowman, B. v. 125. Similarly, nay is the weaker, no the stronger form of negation.

1. 602. A note in Bell's edition makes a difficulty of the scansion of this line. It is perfectly easy. The caesura (carefully marked in MS. E. as occurring after knewe) preserves the final e in knewe from elision.

And ye | him knew | e, as | wel as | do I n

Tyrwhitt reads also for the former as; which is legitimate, because as and also are merely different spellings of the same word.

It is true that the final e in wondre, and again that in werke, are both elided, under similar circumstances, in the two lines next following; but the cases are not quite identical. E in knewe, representing not merely the plural, but also the subjunctive mood, is essential to the conditional form of the sentence, and is of much higher value than the others. If this argument be not allowed, Tyrwhitt's suggestion may be adopted. Or we may read knewen.

1. 608. Rit, contracted from rideth; see other examples in Pref. to Prioresses Tale, p. 1. See also slit for slideth in 1. 682 below.

1. 611. Leye in balansse, place in the balance, weigh against it.

1. 622. The Yeoman puts in a word for himself—'and moreover, I am of some assistance to him.'

1. 625. Vp so don, i.e. upside down, according to our modern phrase. Chaucer's phrase is very common; see Pricke of Conscience, ed. Morris, l. 7230; P. Plowman, B. xx. 53; Gower, Conf. Amantis, &c.

1. 628. Benedicite, pronounced ben'cite, in three syllables, as in B. 1170, 1974. See note to B. 1170 (Prioress's Tale, &c.).

1. 633. Over-slope, upper garment. So in Icelandic, yfirsloppr means an outer gown; as, 'prestar skry'ddir yfirsloppum,' i.e. priests clad in over-slops, Historia Ecclesiastica, i. 473. The word slop is preserved in the somewhat vulgar 'slop-shop', i.e. shop for second-hand clothes.

1. 635. Baudy, dirty. To-tore, torn in half. So in Piers Plowman, B. v. 197, Avarice is described as wearing a 'tabard' which is 'al to-torn and baudy.'

1. 639. The second person sing. imperative seldom exhibits a final e; but it is sometimes found in weak verbs, tellen being one of them. The readings are—Telle, E. Cp. Pt. Hl.; Td, Ln. Cm.

1. 641. For, &c.; because he shall never thrive. The Yeoman blurts out the truth, and is then afraid he has said too much. In l. 644, he gives an evasive and politer reason, declaring that his lord is 'too wise;' see l. 648.

1. 645. That that, that which. In the margin of MS. E. is written—'Omne quod est nimium, &c.;' which is probably short for—'Omne quod est nimium ueritur in uitium.' We also find—' Omne nimium nocet.' The corresponding English proverb is—' Too much of one thing is not good ' (Heywood); on which Ray remarks—' Assez y a si trop n'y a; French. Ne quid nimis; Terentius. Μηδεν áγαv. This is an apothegm of one of the seven wise men; some attribute it to Thales, some to Solon. Est modus in rebus, sunt certi denique fines; Horat. Sat. i. 1. 106. L’abondanza delle cose ingenera fastidio; Ital. Cada dia olla, amargo el caldo; Spanish.' We also find in Hazlitt's English Proverbs—' Too much cunning undoes.'—' Too much is stark nought.'—' Too much of a good thing.'—' Too much spoileth, too little is nothing.' See also the collection of similar proverbs in Ida v. Düringsfeld's Sprichwörter, i. 37, 38.

1. 648. Cf. Butler's description of Hudibras:—
'We grant, although he had much wit,
He was very shy of using it.'

1. 652. Ther-of no fors, never mind about that.
1. 656. If it to telle be, if it may be told. Cf. note to l. 437.
1. 658. A blind lane is one that has no opening at the farther end; a cul de sac.

1. 659. Theues by kynde, thieves by natural disposition.
1. 662. The sothe, the truth. The reader should carefully note the full pronunciation of the final e in sothe. If he should omit to sound it, he will be put to shame when he comes to the end of the next line, ending with to thee. A very similar instance is that of tyme, riming with by me, G. 1204 below. The case is the more remarkable because the A.S. sóð, truth, is a monosyllable; but the truth is that the definite adjective the sothe (A.S. thet sóða) may very well have supplied its place, the adjective being more freely used than the substantive in this instance. Chaucer has sothe at the end of a line in one more place, where it rimes with the disyllabic bothe; G. 168.

We may remark that the sothe is written and pronounced instead of the soth (as shewn by the metre) in the Story of Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 74:—

'He [they] witen the sothe, that is sen.'

1. 665. Peter! by St. Peter. The full form of the phrase—' bi seynt Peter of Rome'—occurs in Piers the Plowman, B. vi. 3. The shorter exclamation—' Peter!' also occurs in the same, B. v. 544; see my note on that line.

1. 669. Multiplye. This was the technical term employed by alchemists to denote their supposed power of transmuting the baser metals into gold; they thought to multiply gold by turning as much base metal as a piece of it would buy into gold itself; see l. 677. Some such pun seems here intended; yet it is proper to remember that the term originally referred solely to the supposed fact that the strength of an elixir could be multiplied by repeated operations. See the article
'De Multiplicatione,' in Theatrum Chemicum, iii. 301, 818; cf. 131.
Cf. Ben Jonson’s Alchemist, ii. 1:

‘For look, how oft I iterate the work,
So many times I add unto his virtue.
As, if at first one ounce convert a hundred,
After his second loose, he’ll turn a thousand;
His third solution, ten; his fourth, a hundred;
After his fifth, a thousand thousand ounces
Of any imperfect metal, into pure
Silver or gold, in all examinations
As good as any of the natural mine.’

1. 686. To scan the line, accent yeman on the latter syllable, as in
ll. 684, 701.
1. 687. To scan the line, pronounce euer nearly as e’er, and remember that hadde is of two syllables. The MSS. agree here.
1. 688. Catoun, Cato. Dionysius Cato is the name commonly assigned to the author of a Latin work in four books, entitled Dionysii Catonis Disticha de Moribus ad Filium. The work may be referred to the fourth century. It was extremely popular, not only in Latin, but in French and English versions. Chaucer here quotes from Lib. i.
Distich. 17:

‘Ne cures si quis tacito sermone loquatur;
Conscius ipse sibi de se putat omnia dici.’

See another quotation from Cato in the Nonne Prestes Tale, l. 120; and see my note to Piers the Plowman, B. vi. 316.

It is worth noticing that Catoun follows the form of the Lat. Catonem, the accusative case. Such is the usual rule.
1. 694. Dere abye, pay dearly for it. Abye (lit. to buy off) was corrupted at a later date to abide, as in Shak. Jul. Caesar, iii. 1. 94.
1. 703. Game, amusement. In l. 708, it is used ironically. Cf. earnest, i.e. a serious matter, in l. 710.

‘Rather than I’ll be bray’d, sir, I’ll believe
That Alchemy is a pretty kind of game,
Somewhat like tricks o’ the cards, to cheat a man
With charming.’—The Alchemist, ii. 1.

NOTES TO THE CANON’S YEOMAN’S TALE.

1. 720. This Tale is divided, in MS. E, into two parts. Pars prima is not really a tale at all, but a description of alchemy and its professors.
The real tale, founded on the same subject, is contained in Pars Secunda, beginning at l. 972. The rubric means—‘Here the Canon's Yeoman begins his tale.’ The word tale is not to be taken as a nominative case.

1. 721. Neer, nearer; this explains near in Macbeth, ii. 3. 146.
1. 724. Ther, where; observe the use. In l. 727, we have wher.
1. 726. Hose, an old stocking, instead of a hood.
1. 730. ‘And, in return for all my labour, I am cajoled.’ To ‘blore one's eye’ is to cajole, to deceive, to hoodwink. See Piers the Plowman, B. prol. 74, and the note.
1. 731. Which, what sort of a; Lat. qualis. On multiplye, see note to l. 669.

1. 739. ‘I consider his prosperity as done with.’
1. 743. Iupartie, jeopardy, hazard. Tyrwhitt remarks that the derivation is not from jeu perdu, as some have guessed, but from jeu parti. He adds—‘A jeu parti is properly a game, in which the chances are exactly even; see Froissart, v. i. c. 234—‘Ils n'estoient pas à jeu parti contre les François;’ and v. ii. c. 9—‘si nous les voyons à jeu parti.’ From hence it signifies anything uncertain or hazardous. In the old French poetry, the discussion of a problem, where much might be said on both sides, was called a jeu parti. See Poesies du Roy de Navarre, Chanson xlviii., and Gloss. in v. See also Ducange, in v. Focus Partitus.’ Ducange has—‘focus partitus dicebatur, cum alicui facultas concedebatur, alterum e duobus propositis eligendi.’ Hence was formed not only jeopardy, but even the verb to jeopard, used in the A. V., Judges v. 18; 2 Macc. xi. 7. Also in Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 139, side-note 2.

1. 746. In the margin of MS. E. is written—‘Solacium miserorum, &c.’ In Marlowe's Faustus, ii. 1. 47, the proverb is quoted in the form 'Solamen misericordia socios habuisse doloris.' Dr. Wagner says: ‘The purport of this line may have been originally derived from Seneca, De Consol. ad Polybium, xii. 2: est autem hoc ipsum solatiui loco, inter multos dolorem suum dividere; qui quia dispensatur inter plures, exigua debet apud te parte subsidere.' Cf. Milton, P. R. i. 398. The idea is that conveyed in the fable of the Fox who had lost his tail, and wished to persuade the other foxes to cut theirs off likewise.

1. 752. ‘The technical terms which we use are so learned and fine. See this well illustrated in Jonson’s Alchemist, ii. 1:—

‘What else are all your terms,
Whereon no one of your writers 'grees with other,
Of your elixir, your lac virginis,
Your stone, your medicine, and your chrysosperme,
Your sal, your sulphur, and your mercury,’ &c.

1. 764. Lampe; so in the MSS. It is clearly put for lambe, a corruption of O. Fr. lame, Lat. lamina. Were there any MS. authority, it would be better to read lame at once. Cotgrave has—"Lame; f. a thin plate of any metall; also, a blade." &c. Nares has—"Lamms, s. a plate, from Lat. lamina. "But he strake Phalantus just upon the gorret, so as he batred the lamms thereof, and made his head almost touch the back of his horse;" Pembr. Arcadia, lib. iii, p. 269." Lame in old French also means, the flat slab covering a tomb; see Roquefort. So here, after the ingredients have all been placed in a pot, they are covered over with a plate of glass laid flat upon the top.

It is strange that no editor has made any attempt to explain this word. It obviously does not mean lamp. For the insertion of the p, cf. solempne for solemne, and nempne for nemue; see Gloss. to Prior. Tale.

1. 766. Enluting. To enlute is to close with lute. Webster has—"Lute, n. (Lat. lutum, mud, clay). A composition of clay or other tenacious substance, used for stopping the juncture of vessels so closely as to prevent the escape or entrance of air, or to protect them when exposed to heat.'

The process is minutely described in a MS. by Sir George Erskine, of Innertiel (temp. James I.), printed by Mr. J. Small in the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, vol. xi. 1874–75, p. 193, as follows:—"Thairfoir when all the matter which must be in, is gathered together into the pot, tak a good lute maid of potters clay, and mix it with bolus and rust of iron tempered with whitts of eggs and chopt hair, and mingle and worke thame weill togither, and lute 3oure pott ane inch thick thairwith, and mak a stopple of potters earth weill brunt, to shut close in the hole that is in the top of the cover of the pott, and lute the pott and the cover very close togither, so as no ayre may brek furth, and when any craks cum into it, in the drying of the lute, dawbe them up againe; and when the lute is perfectly drie in the sunne, then take a course linen or canvas, and soke it weill in the whitts of eggs mixt with iron rust, and spread this cloth round about the luting, and then wet it weill again with whitts of eggs and upon the luting;" &c.

1. 768. The alchemists were naturally very careful about the heat of the fire. So in The Alchemist, ii. 1:

'Look well to the register,
And let your heat still lessen by degrees.'

And again, in iii. 2:

'We must now increase
Our fire to ignis ardens, we are passed

Fimus equinus, balnei, cineris,
And all those lenter heats.'

1. 770. Materies sublyming, sublimation of materials. To 'sublimate' is to render vaporous, to cause matter to pass into a state of vapour by the application of heat. 'Philosophi considerantes eorum materiam, quae est in vase suo, et calorem sentit, evaporatur in speciem fumi, et ascendit.

'Subtle. How do you sublime him [mercury]?
Face. With the calce of egg-shells,
White marble, tale.' The Alchemist, ii. i.

l. 771. Amalgaming. To 'amalgamate' is to compound or mix intimately, especially used of mixing quicksilver with other metals. The term is still in use; thus 'an amalgam of tin' means a mixture of tin and quicksilver.

Calcining. To 'calcine' is to reduce a metal to an oxide, by the action of heat. What is now called an oxide was formerly called 'a metallic calx;' hence the name. The term is here applied to quicksilver or mercury. For example—'When mercury is heated, and at the same time exposed to atmospheric air, it is found that the volume of the air is diminished, and the weight of the mercury increased, and that it becomes, during the operation, a red crystalline body, which is the binoxide of mercury, formed by the metal combining with the oxygen of the air;' English Cyclopaedia, Div. Arts and Sciences, s. v. Oxygen. 'The alchemists used to keep mercury at a boiling heat for a month or longer in a matrass, or a flask with a tolerably long neck, having free communication with the air. It thus slowly absorbed oxygen, becoming converted into binoxide, and was called by them mercurius precipitatus per se. It is now however generally prepared by calcination from mercuric nitrate'; id., s. v. Mercury.

l. 772. Mercurie crude, crude Mercury. See note to l. 820. See the description of Mercury in Ashmole's Theat. Chem. p. 272. The alchemists pretended that their quicksilver, which they called the Green Lion, was something different from quicksilver as ordinarily found. See treatise on 'The Greene Lyon,' in Ashmole's Theat. Chem. p. 280.

l. 774. Note the accents—'súblýméd Mercúrie.'

l. 778. Here the 'ascension of spirits' refers to the rising of gases or vapours from certain substances; and the 'matters that lie all fix adown' are the materials that lie at the bottom in a fixed (i.e. in a solid) state. There were four substances in particular which were technically termed 'spirits;' viz. sulphur, sal ammoniac, quicksilver, and arsenic, or (as some said) orpiment. See Theatrwm Chemicum, iii. 81, 129; ii. 430; iii. 276.

l. 782. Here a = in; being short for an, a variant of on, used in the old sense of 'in.' The expression signifies, literally, in the manner of twenty devils, i.e. in all sorts of evil and accursed ways.

l. 790. Bole armoniak. The latter word should rather be Armeniak, i.e. Armenian, but we have armoniak again below, in l. 798; see note to that line.

'Bole, a kind of fine, compact, or earthy clay, often highly coloured with iron, and varying in shades of colour from white to yellowish, reddish, blueish, and brownish. Fr. bol, Lat. bolus, Gk. βωλος, a clod or lump of earth;’ Webster’s Dict., ed. Goodrich and Porter. Cotgrave has—‘Bol, m. the astringent and medicinable red earth or minerall called Bolearmonie... Bole Oriental, et Bol Armenien Oriental, Oriental Bolearmonie; the best and truest kind of Bolearmonie, ministred with good effect against all poisons, and in pestilent diseases; and more red than the ordinary one, which should rather be tearmed Sinopian red earth than Bolearmeny.’ And again—‘Rubrique Sinopique, Sinopian red earth, a heavy, massive, liver-coloured, and astringent earth, or minerall, which, put into water, soon moulders, and falls into pieces. This may very well be the ordinarie Bolearmonie [sic] that is, at this day, used by many surgeons in the stannching of blood, &c., but is not the true (Oriental) one, redder then it, and not so easily dissolved by water as it.’

Verdegrees looks at first like a corruption of verd-de-gris, but that would mean ‘green of gray,’ which is nonsense. It is really an English corruption of the French verderis (given in Cotgrave’s Dict.), confused with the Eng. grease, from the notion that it is of a greasy nature. The French verderis is, again, the Latin viride aeris, the green of brass. This term (viride aeris) is the common one in the old Latin treatises on alchemy. See the chapter in Albertus Magnus—‘Quomodo viride aeris fit, et quomodo rubificatur, et super omnia valet ad artem istam;’ Theatrum Chemicum, ii. 436. It is the bibasic acetate of copper.

1. 794. Cucurbites, vessels supposed to bear some resemblance to a gourd, whence the name (Lat. cucurbita, a gourd). ‘Cucurbita est uas quod debet stare in aqua, usque ad juncturam firmatum in caldario, ut non moueat; nec cucurbita debet tangere fundum, quia frangeretur; et cum aqua minuitur, fundas aliam, solicet calidam et non frigidam, quia uas frangeretur;’ Theatrum Chemicum, ii. 452.

1. 797. Watres rubifying, reddening waters. This is well illustrated by a long passage in The Boke of Quinte Essence, ed. Furnivall, p. 13, where instructions are given for extracting the quintessence out of the four elements. After various processes, we are directed to put the vessel into ‘the fier of flawme right strong, and the reed water schal ascende;’ and again—than ne yn the stillatoric, to the fier of bath, cleer water schall asende; and in the botum shall remayne the reed water, that is, the element of fier.’ A long and unintelligible passage about ‘rubificatio’ and ‘aqua spiritualis rubea’ occurs in the Theatrum Chemicum, iii. 41. See also ‘modus rubricandi’ and the recipe for ‘aqua rubea;’ id. iii. 110.

1. 798. Arsenic was by some considered as one of the ‘four spirits;’ see note to 1. 778. For a long passage ‘de arsenico,” see Theatrum
Chemicum, iii. 177; also p. 110, and ii. 238. Sal armoniacum was another of them (see l. 824) and is constantly mentioned in the old treatises; see ‘præparatio salis Armoniaci secundum Rasim;’ Theat. Chem. iii. 179; also pp. 89, 94, 102; ii. 445. In vol. ii. p. 158 of the same work, it is twice called ‘sal armeniacum.’ See the account of sal ammoniac in Thomson, Hist. of Chemistry, i. 124. Brimstoon was also a ‘spirit’ (see l. 824); it is only another name for sulphur.

1. 800. Egrimoin, common agrimony, Ægrimonia officinalis; valerian, Valeriana officinalis; lunarie, a kind of fern called in English moon-wort, Botrychium lunaria. The belief in the virtue of herbs was very strong; hence even Spenser says (F. Q. i. 2. 10) that the magician Archimago was thus enabled to turn himself into the shape of various animals, adding—

‘O who can tell

The hidden power of herbs, and might of magic spell.’

The root of valerian yields valerianic acid. The following quotation is from the English Encyclopædia, s.v. Botrychium:—

‘In former times the ferns had a great reputation in medicine, not so much on account of their obvious as their supposed virtues. The lunate shape of the pinnae of this fern (B. lunaria) gave it its common name, and was the origin of much of the superstitious veneration with which it was regarded. When used it was gathered by the light of the moon. Gerarde says—‘it is singular [i.e. sovereign] to heal green and fresh wounds. It hath been used among the alchemists and witches to do wonders withal, who say that it will loose locks and make them to fall from the feet of horses that graze where it doth grow, and hath been called of them Martagon, whereas in truth they are all but drowsy dreams and illusions; but it is singular for wounds as aforesaid.’

In Ashmole’s Theatrum Chemicum, p. 348, is a full description of ‘lunayrie,’ with an engraving of it. It is there also called asterion, and we are told that its root is black, its stalk red, and its leaves round; and moreover, that the leaves wax and wane with the moon, and on each of them is a mark of the breadth of a penny. See also pp. 315, 318 of the same work.

1. 805. Albificiacioun, i.e. the rendering the water of a white colour, as distinguishing from the reddening of it, mentioned in l. 797. In a long chapter printed in the Theatrum Chemicum (iii. 634–648) much is said about red and white colours. Compare the Alchemist, ii. 1:—

‘Subtle. I mean to tinct C in sand-heat tomorrow,
And give him imbibition.

Mammon.

Of white oil?

Subtle. No, sir, of red.’

No doubt, too, water is here used in the sense of the Lat. aqua, to denote any substance that is in a liquid state.
1. 808. Cered pockets. Tyrwhitt reads Sered pokettes, and includes this phrase in his short ‘List of Phrases not understood;’ and indeed, it has never been explained. But there is little difficulty about it. Poket is the diminutive of poke, a bag, and means a little bag. Cered (Lat. ceratus) means waxed. Thus Cotgrave has—‘Ciré, m. -ée, f. waxed, seared; dressed, covered, closed, or mingled, with wax.’ In many MSS. the word is spelt sered, but this makes no difference, since Cotgrave has ‘seared’ in this very place. So we find both ‘cere-cloth’ and ‘sear-cloth.’ It is obvious that bags or cases prepared or closed with wax would be useful for many of the alchemist’s purposes; see Theat. Chem. iii. 13. There was a special process in alchemy called ceration, but this has nothing to do with it; it means the reduction of any material to the consistency of soft wax; Theat. Chem. ii. 442.

Sal peter, Lat. sal petrae, or rock-salt, also called nitre, is nitrate of potassa. A recipe for preparing it is given in Theat. Chem. iii. 195.

Vitriole, i.e. sulphuric acid. See ‘vitrioli praeparatio;’ Theat. Chem. iii. 95.

1. 810. Sal tartre, salt of tartar, i.e. carbonate of potash; so called from its having been formerly prepared from cream of tartar.

Sal praeparate, common salt prepared in a certain manner. See the section—‘quod ualeat sal commune, et quomodo praeparetur;’ Theat. Chem. ii. 433, 435.

1. 812. Maad, i.e. prepared, mixed. Oile of tartre, oil of tartar. See the section—‘quod ualeat sal commune, et quomodo praeparetur;’ Theat. Chem. ii. 436; and again—‘ad faciendum oleum de Tartaro;’ id. iii. 303. To scan l. 813, remember to pronounce tartre as in French, and to accent alum on the latter syllable.

Of tátr | álím | glas bérn | wort ánd | argofé ||

1. 814. Resalgar, realgar, red orpiment, or the red sulphuret of arsenic; symbol (As₂); found native in some parts of Europe, and of a brilliant red colour. Resalgar is a corruption of the old Latin name, risigallum. The word is explained by Thynne in his Animadversions, ed. Furnivall, p. 36—‘This resalgar is that which by some is called Ratesbane, a kynde of poysone named Arsenicke, whiche the chemicall philosophers call their venome or poysone.’

Enbibing, imbibition; see this term used in the quotation from The Alchemist, in the note to l. 805. It means absorption; cf. Theat. Chem. iii. 132, l. 27.

1. 816. Citrinacion. This also is explained by Thynne, who says (p. 38)—‘Citrinacione is bothe a coolor [colour] and parte of the philosophers stoone.’ He then proceeds to quote from a Tractatus Avicennæ, cap. 7, and from Arnoldus de Nova Villa, lib. i. cap. 5. It was supposed that when the materials for making the philosopher’s stone had been brought into a state very favourable to the ultimate success of the experiment, they would assume the colour of a citron; or, as Thynne says, Arnold speaks of 'this citrinatione, perfecte digestione, or the cooler provinge the philosophers stoone broughte alomoste to the heighte of his perfectione.' So in the Alchemist, iii. 2:—

'How's the moon now? eight, nine, ten days hence
He will be silver potate; then three days Before he citronise. Some fifteen days,
The magisterium will be perfected.'

1. 817. Fermentacioun, fermentation. This term is also noticed by Speght (p. 33), who says—'fermentacione ys a peculier terme of Alchymye, deduced from the bakers fermente or levyne;' &c. See Theat. Chem. ii. 115, 175.

1. 820. Foure spirites. Chaucer enumerates these below. I have already mentioned them in the note to l. 778; see also note to l. 798. Tyrwhitt refers us to Gower's Confessio Amantis, bk. iv, where we find a passage very much to the point. I quote it from Chalmers' edition, correcting the spelling. Cf. Pauli's edition, ii. 84.

'And also with gret diligence
Thei fonde thilke experience,
Which cleped is Alconomye,
Wherof the siluer multiplye
They made, and eek the gold also.
And, for to telle how it is so,
Of bodies seuen in special,
With foure spirites ioynt withal,
Stant the substance of this matere.
The bodies, whiche I speke of here
Of the planetes ben begonne.
The gold is titled to the sonne;
The monе of siluer hath his part;
And iron, that stant vpon Mart;
The leed vpon Saturne groweth;
And Iupiter the bras bestoweth;
The copper set is to Venus;
And to his part Mercurius
Hath the quick-siluer, as it falleth,
The whiche, after the boke it calleth,
Is first of thilke foure named
Of spirites, whiche ben proclaimed.
And the spirit which is seconde
In sal armoniak is fonde.
The thridde spirit sulphur is.
The fourthe, sewend after this,
Arsenicum by name is hote.
With blowing and with fyres hote
In these thinges whiche I saye
Thei worchen by diuerse waye.'

He further explains that gold and silver are the two 'extremities,' and the other metals agree with one or other of them more or less, so as to be capable of transmutation into one of them. For this purpose, the alchemist must go through the processes of distillation, congelation, solution, descension, sublimation, calcination, and fixation, after which he will obtain the perfect elixir of the philosopher's stone. He adds that there are really three philosopher's stones, one vegetable, capable of healing diseases; another animal, capable of assisting each of the five senses of man; and the third mineral, capable of transforming the baser metals into silver and gold.

'It maketh multiplicacioun
Of golde, and the fixacioun
It causeth, and of his habite
He doth the werk to be perfite
Of thilke elixir, which men calle
Alkonomye, as is bealle
To hem that whylom were wyse.
But now it stant al otherwyse.
They spoken faste of thilke stone,
But how to make it now wot none,
After the trewe experience.
And Nathales gret diligence
They setten yp[on] thilke dede,
And spillen more then thi spede.
For alway thei fynden a lette
Which bringeth in pouerte and dette
To him that riche were tofore.
The losse is had, the lucre is lore.
To gette a pound they spenden fyue.
I not how suche a craft shal thryue
In the manere as it is vseid.
It were better be refused
Than for to werchen yp[on] wene [expectation]}
In thing which stant not as thei wene.'

It is easy to see how the various metals were made to answer to the seven planets. Gold, the chief of metals and yellow, of course answered to the sun, and similarly silver, to the paler moon. Mercury, the swiftest planet, must be the shiftty quicksilver; Saturn, the slowest, of cold and dull influence, must be lead. The etymology of copper suggested the connection with the Cyprian Venus. This left but two metals, iron and tin, to be adjusted; iron was suggestive of Mars, the god of war, leaving tin to Jupiter. The notion of thus naming the metals is attributed to Geber; see Thomson, Hist. of Chemistry, i. 117.

Quicksilver, be it observed, is still called mercury; and nitrate of silver is still lunar caustic. Gold and silver are constantly termed sol and luna in the old treatises on alchemy. See further allusions in Chaucer’s House of Fame, iii. 341–397, as pointed out in my Pref. to Chaucer’s Astrolabie, p.lxiv.

1. 834. ‘Whosoever pleases to utter (i.e. display) his folly.’
1. 838. Ascance, possibly, perhaps. See Glossary.
1. 846. Al conne he, whether he know. The use of al at the beginning of a sentence containing a supposition is common in Chaucer; see Prot. 734. Cf. al be, Prot. 297; Kn. Tale, 313. And see l. 861.
1. 848. Bothe two, both learned and unlearned alike.
1. 861. ‘To raise a fiend, though he look never so rough,’ i.e. forbidding, cross.
1. 874. It is to seken ever, it is always to seek, i.e. never found. In Skelton’s Why Come Ye Nat to Court, l. 314, the phrase ‘they are to seke’ means ‘they are at a loss;’ this latter is the commoner use.
1. 875. Temps, tense. The editors explain it by ‘time.’ If Chaucer had meant time, it is reasonable to suppose that he would have said so. Surely it is better to take ‘that futur tems’ in the special sense of ‘that future tense.’ The allusion is to the phrase ‘to seken’ in the last line, which is not an infinitive mood but a gerund, and often used as a future tense, as Chaucer very well knew. Compare the A.S. version of Matt. xi. 3—‘cart þu þe to cumenne eart’—with the Lat. ‘Tu es qui venturus es.’
1. 878. Bitter swete, i.e. a fatal, though alluring, pursuit. An example of oxymoron; cf. ‘insaniens sapientia,’ Horat. Carm. i. 34; ‘strenua inertia,’ Epist. i. xi. 28.
1. 879. Nadde they but, if they only should have (or, were to have). Nadde is for ne hadde, past tense subjunctive.
1. 880. Inne, within; A.S. innan; see l. 881. A nyght, for on nyght, in the night. Perhaps it should be nyghte (with final e), and byghte in l. 881.
1. 881. Bak, cloth; any rough sort of covering for the back. So in most MSS.; altered in E. to brat, but unnecessarily. That the word bak was used in the sense of garment is quite certain from two other passages which I shall cite. That it meant originally a covering for the back, will appear from a third one.

(1) In William of Palerne, ed. Skeat, l. 2996, we have—
‘Than brayde he brayn-wod & alle his bakkes rente,
His berde, and his bright fax for bale he to-twight[e].’
I.e. then he became brain-mad, and tare all his clothes; he plucked asunder, for sorrow, his beard and his bright hair. Note that it is used here in all seriousness.

(2) In Piers the Plowman, B. x. 362, men are blamed for hoarding up clothes, and mention is made of ‘owre bakkes that moth-eten be,’ i.e. of our garments that are moth-eaten for want of use. Here, in one MS., the gloss ‘panni’ is written above; in another MS., the reading is ‘bakclothis.’

(3) In Piers the Plowman, A. xi. 184, we are reminded of the duty of providing bread and clothing for the poor:

‘Dowel it hatte [is called]
To breke beggeris bred and bakken hem with clothis.’

Pronounce the words And a rapidly, in the time of one syllable.

1. 907. To-brekeith, bursts in pieces. Go, gone. This must have been a very common result; the old directions about ‘luting’ and hermetically sealing the vessels employed are so strict, that every care seems to have been (unwittingly) taken to secure an explosion; see note to l. 766 above. So in the Alchemist, iv. 3.

‘Face. O, sir, we are defeated! all the works
Are flown in fumo, every glass is burst:
Furnace, and all rent down! as if a bolt
Of thunder had been driven through the house.
Retorts, receivers, pelicans, bolt-heads,
All struck in shivers!’

1. 921. Chit, short for chideth; so also halt for holdeith.
1. 922. Som seyde, i.e. one said; note that som is here singular, as in Kn. Tale, 2173. Hence the use of the thridde, i.e. the third, in l. 925.

1. 929. So theeich, for so thee ich, so may I thrive. See Pard. Tale, C. 947.

1. 933. Eft-sone, for the future; lit. soon afterwards.
1. 934. ‘I am quite sure that the pot was cracked.’
1. 962. The reading shyneth is of course the right one. In the margin of MS. E. is written ‘Non teneas aurum,’ &c. This proves that Tyrwhitt’s note is quite correct. He says—‘This is taken from the Parabolæ of Alanus de Insulis, who died in 1294; see Leyser, Hist. Po. Med. Ævi, p. 1074.

‘Non teneas aurum totum quod splendet ut aurum,
Nec pulchrum pomum quodlibet esse bonum.’
Shakespeare has—‘All that glisters is not gold;’ Merch. of Venice, ii. 7. 65. Hazlitt’s English Proverbs has—‘All is not gold that glisters (Heywood). See Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Prol.; Roxburghe Ballads, ed. Collier, p. 102; Udall’s Royster Doyster, 1566, where we read: All things that shineth is not by and by pure golde (Act v. sc. 1). Fronti nulla fides, Juvenal, Sat. ii. 8. The French say, Tout ce qui luict n’est par. Non è oro tutto quel che luce; Ital. No es todo or lo que reluce; Span.' So in German—'Est ist nicht Alles Gold was glänzt;' and again—'Rothe Aepfel sind auch faul.' See Ida v. Düringsfeld's Sprichwörter, i. 53, 107. Cf. Chaucer's House of Fame, i. 272.

1. 972. Pars secunda. This is where the Tale begins. Even now, the Yeoman has some more to say by way of preface, and only makes a real start at l. 1012.

1. 975. Alisauandre, Alexandria. And other three, and three more as well. 1. 999. I mente, I intended; as in I. 1051 below. 'But my intention was to correct that which is amiss.'

The reading I-ment, as a past participle, adopted by Mr. Wright, is incorrect, as shewn by Mr. Cromie's Ryme-Index. Cf. Nonne Pr. Tale, 603; Sq. Tale, F. 108. See note to G. 534, above.

1. 1005. By you, with reference to you canons. See By in Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook.

1. 1012. Annuelles. So called, as Tyrwhitt explains, 'from their being employed solely in singing annuals or anniversary masses for the dead, without any cure of souls. See the Stat. 36 Edw. III. c. viii, where the Chappelleins Parochiels are distinguished from others chantanz annuales, et a cure des almes nient entendantz. They were both to receive yearly stipends, but the former was allowed to take six marks, the latter only five. Compare Stat. 2 Hen. V. St. 2. c. 2, where the stipend of the Chapellein Parochiel is raised to eight marks, and that of the Chapellein annueller (he is so named in the statute) to seven.'

1. 1015. That is, to the lady of the house where he lodged.

1. 1018. Spending siluer, money to spend, ready money. The phrase occurs in Piers the Plowman, B. xi. 278.

1. 1025. A certeyn, a certain sum, a stated sum. Cf. I. 776.

1. 1027. At my day, on the day agreed upon, on the third day.

1. 1029. Another day, another time, on the next occasion.

1. 1039. Him took, handed over to him; so in ll. 1034, 1112.

1. 1055. 'In some measure to requite your kindness.' See note to Sq. Tale, F. 471, and cf. I. 1151.

1. 1059. Seen at ye, see evidently; lit. see at eye.

1. 1066. 'Proffered service stinketh' is among Heywood's Proverbs. Ray remarks on it—'Merx ultronea putet, apud Hieronymum. Erasmus saith, Quin uulgo etiam in ore est, ultro delatum obsequium plerumque ingratum esse. So that it seems this proverb is in use among the Dutch too. In French, Merchandise offerte est à demi vendue. Ware that is proffered is sold for half the worth, or at half the price.' The German is—'Angebotene Hölfe hat keinen Lohn;' see Ida v. Düringsfeld's Sprichwörter, i. 86.

1. 1096. Algates, at any rate. Observe the context.

1. 1103. That we it hadde, that we might have it. Hadde is here the subjunctive. Perhaps haue (present) would be better, but it lacks authority.

1. 1126. Mortiffye, mortify; a technical term. See note to l. 1431.
1. 1151. ‘To blind the priest with.’ See note to l. 1055.
1. 1185. Seint Gyles, saint Giles; a corrupted form of Ægildus. His day is Sept. 1; see Chambers’ Book of Days, ii. 296; Legenda Aurea, cap. cxxx.

II. 1204, 1205. The rime is given by tymè (two syllables, from A.S. tîma) riming with by me. The same rime occurs at least six times in Gower’s Confessio Amantis (ed. Chalmers, bk. ii. p. 60, col. 2; bk. iii. p. 76. col. 2; also pp. 103, 105, 120, 157):—

‘Haue seigned semblant oftè tymè
To hem that passen al day by me.’
‘And hindred me ful oftè tymè
When thei no causè wisté by me; ’ &c., &c.

In all six places, Mr. Chalmers prints byme as one word! See hy the (l. 1295); sees ye (l. 1375).

On referring to Prof. Child’s Observations on the Language of Gower, I find seven references given for this rime, as occurring in the edition by Dr. Pauli. The references are—i. 227, 309, 370; ii. 41, 114, 277; iii. 369. Dr. Pauli also prints byme as one word.

1. 1210. Scan the line by pronouncing the words or a rapidly. The last foot contains the words—or a pannè.
1. 1238, 1239. MS. E. omits these two lines: the other MSS. retain them.
1. 1244. Halvues is in the genitive plural. ‘And the blessing of all the saints may ye have, Sir Canon I?’
1. 1245. ‘And may I have their malison,’ I.e. their curse.
1. 1283. ‘Why do you wish it to be better than well?’ Answering nearly to—‘what would you have better?’
1. 1292. A rather lax line. Is ther is to be pronounced rapidly, in the time of one syllable, and her-inne is of three syllables.
1. 1299. Pronounce simple nearly as in French, and remember the final e in tonge (A.S. tunge).
1. 1313. His ape, his dupe. See Pro/. 706. The simile is evidently taken from the fact that showmen used to carry apes about with them much as organ-boys do at the present day, the apes being secured by a string. Thus, ‘to make a man one’s ape’ is to lead him about at will. The word apewarde occurs in Piers the Powman, B. v. 540. To lead apes means to lead about a train of dupes. In the Prioress’s Prologue, B. 1630, I have explained ape by ‘fool,’ following former editors. It now occurs to me that the word ‘dupe’ expresses the meaning still better. (This is corrected in the second edition.)
1. 1319. Heyne, wretch. This word has never before been properly explained. It is not in Tyrwhitt’s Glossary. Dr. Morris considers it as another form of hyne, a peasant, or hind, but leaves the phonetic difference of vowel unaccounted for. It occurs in Skelton’s Bowge of Courte, l. 327:

‘It is great scorne to see suche an hayne
As thou arte, one that cam but yestredayse,
With us olde seruanntes suche maysters to playe.’

Here Mr. Dyce also explains it by hind, or servant, whereas the context requires the opposite meaning of a despised master. Halliwell gives—‘Heyne, a miser, a worthless person;’ but without a reference. For further examples, see hean in Stratmann; the word can hardly be from the A.S. hina, a hind; rather cf. A.S. hean, abject. See the Glossary.

l. 1320. ‘This priest being meanwhile unaware of his false practice.’ See l. 1324.

l. 1342. Alluding to the proverb—‘As fain as a fowl [i.e. bird] of a fair morrow;’ given by Hazlitt in the form—‘As glad as fowl of a fair day.’ See Piers the Plowman, B. x. 153; Kn. Tale, 1579.

l. 1348. To stonde in grace; cf. Prol. 88.

l. 1354. By our; pronounced By’r, as spelt in Shakespeare, Mid. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 14.

l. 1362. Nere, for ne were; meaning ‘were it not for.’

l. 1381. Sy, saw. The scribes also use the form sey or seigh, as in Kn. Tale, 208; Franklin’s Tale, F. 850, in both of which places it rimes with heigh (high). Of these spellings sey (riming with hey) is to be preferred in most cases. See note to Group B, l. 1 (Prioresses Tale, &c.).

l. 1388. This line begins with a large capital C in the Ellesmere MS., shewing that the Tale itself is at an end, and the rest is the Yeoman’s application of it.

l. 1389. ‘There is strife between men and gold to that degree, that there is scarcely any (gold) left.’

l. 1408. Alluding to the proverb—‘Burnt bairns fear fire.’ This occurs among the Proverbs of Hendyng, in the form—‘Brend child fur dredeeth.’ So in the Romaunt of the Rose, l. 1820—‘Brent child of fyr hath moche drede.’ The German is—‘Ein gebranntes Kind fürchtet das Feuer;’ see Ida v. Düringsfeld’s Sprichwörter, i. 531.

l. 1410. Alluding to the proverb—‘Better late than never;’ in French ‘Il vaunt mieux tard que jamais.’ The German is—‘Besser spät als nie;’ see Ida v. Düringsfeld’s Sprichwörter, i. 204.

l. 1411. In Hazlitt’s Proverbs—‘Never is a long term.’

l. 1413. Bayard was a colloquial name for a horse; see Piers Plowman, B. iv. 53, 124; vi. 196; and ‘As bold as blind Bayard’ was a common proverb. See also Chaucer’s Troil. and Cress. i. 218.

l. 1416. ‘As to turn aside from an obstacle in the road.’

l. 1419. Compare this with the Man of Lawes Tale, B. 552.

l. 1422. Rape and renne, seize and plunder. The phrase is of Scandinavian origin. Rape is preserved in the Swedish rappa, to seize, allied to M.E. rape, signifying ‘haste’; cf. Icel. rífa, to plunder, Icel. rifa, to rive, to grasp. Renne is not connected with A.S. rennan, to run, but with Icel. rana, to rob, rán, seizure, plunder. The collocation of words is seen in the Icel. rífs ok ránnum, with pilfering and plundering. Fornmannna Sögur, i. 119; rán ok rífs, plunder and robbery, id. ii. 119, vi. 42, vii. 363 (s.v. rán and rífs in Cleasby and Vigfusson’s Icelandic Dictionary). Hence the Cleveland form of the phrase is ‘to rap and reeve,’ sometimes ‘to rap and rec;’ see Rap in Atkinson’s Cleveland Glossary. Mr. Atkinson remarks that ‘heo rupten, heo reædên’ in Layamon, ii. 16, first text, is equivalent to ‘hii rupten, hii refden’ in the second; whilst the Ancren Riwe gives the form areþen and arechen, with the various readings rapen and rinen, ropen and rimen. Thre quotes the English ‘rap and ran, per fas et nefas ad se pertrahere.’ Mr. Wedgwood remarks that in rap and ran, to get by hook or crook, to seize whatever one can lay hands on, the word rap is joined with the synonymous [verb connected with the] Icel. rán, rapine. Palsgrave has—‘I rap or rende, je rapine.’ Coles (Eng. Dict. ed. 1684) has ‘rap an[d] ren, snatch and catch.’ The phrase is still in use in the (corrupted) form to rape and rend, or (in Cleveland) to rap and ree.

1. 1428. Arnoldus de Villa Nova was a French physician, theologian, astrologer, and alchemist; born about A.D. 1235, died A.D. 1314. Tyrwhitt refers us to Fabricius, Bibl. Med. Et., in v. Arnaldus Villanovanus. In a tract printed in Theatrum Chemicum, iii. 285, we have a reference to the same saying—‘Et hoc est illud quod magni philosophi scripserunt, quod lapis noster fit ex Mercurio et sulphure preparatis et separatis, et de hoc opere et substantia dicit Magister Arnoldus in tractatu suo parabolice, nisi granum frumentum in terra cadens mortuum fuerit, &c. Intelligens pro grano mortuo in terra, Mercurinum mortuum cum salepetrae et vitriolo Romano, et cum sulphure, et ibi mortificatur, et ibi sublimatur cum igne, et sic multum fructus adfert, et hic est lapis major omnibus, quem philosophi quaesiverunt, et inventum absconderunt.’ The whole process is described, but it is quite unintelligible to me. It is clear that two circumstances stand very much in the way of our being able to follow out such processes; these are (1) that the same substance was frequently denoted by six or seven different names; and (2) that one name (such as sulphur) denoted five or six different things (such as sulphuric acid, orpiment, sulphuret of arsenic, &c.)

1. 1429. Rosarie, i.e. Rosarium Philosophorum, the name of a treatise on alchemy by Arnoldus de Villa Nova; Theat. Chem. iv. 514.

1. 1431. The word mortification seems to have been loosely used to denote any change due to chemical action. Phillips explains Mortify by—'Among chymists, to change the outward form or shape of a mixt body; as when quicksilver, or any other metal, is dissolved in an acid menstruum.'

1. 1432. 'Unless it be with the knowledge (i.e. aid) of his brother.' The 'brother' of Mercury was sulphur or brimstone (see l. 1439). The dictum itself is, I suppose, as worthless as it is obscure.

1. 1434. Hermes, i.e. Hermes Trismegistus, fabled to have been the inventor of alchemy. Several books written by the New Platonists in the fourth century were ascribed to him. Tyrwhitt notes that a treatise under his name may be found in the Theatrum Chemicum, vol. iv. See Fabricius, Bibliotheca Græca, lib. i. c. 10; and Smith's Classical Dictionary. The name is preserved in the phrase 'to seal hermetically.'

Mr. Furnivall printed, for the Early Eng. Text Society, a tract called The Book of Quinte Essence, 'a tretise in Englisch breuely drawe out of the book of quintis essenciis in latyn, that hernys the prophete and kync of Egipt, after the flood of Noe, fadir of philosophris, hadde by ruelacioun of an anguil of god to him sende.'

1. 1438. Dragoun, dragon. Here, of course, it means mercury, or some compound containing it. In certain processes, the solid residuum was also called draco or draco qui comedit caudam suam. This draco and the cauda draconis are frequently mentioned in the old treatises; see Theatrum Chemicum, iii. 29, 36, &c. The terms may have been derived from astrology, since 'dragon's head' and 'dragon's tail' were common terms in that science. Chaucer mentions the latter in his Astrolabie, ii. 4. 22. And see the remarks on 'Draco' in Theat. Chem. ii. 456.

1. 1440. Sol and luna, gold and silver. The alchemists called sol (gold) the father, and luna (silver) the mother of the elixir or philosopher's stone. See Theat. Chem. iii. 9, 24, 25; iv. 528. Similarly, sulphur was said to be the father of minerals, and mercury the mother. Id. iii. 7.

1. 1447. Secre, secret of secrets. Tyrwhitt notes—'Chaucer refers to a treatise entitled Secreta Secretorum, which was supposed to contain the sum of Aristotle's instructions to Alexander. See Fabricius, Bibliotheca Græca, vol. ii. p. 167. It was very popular in the middle ages. Ægidius de Columnná, a famous divine and bishop, about the latter end of the 13th century, built upon it his book De Regimine Principum, of which our Occleve made a free translation in English verse, and addressed it to Henry V. while Prince of Wales. A part of Lydgate's translation of the Secreta Secretorum is printed in Ashmole's Theatrum Chemicum Britannicum, p. 397. He did not translate more than about half of it, being prevented by death. See MS. Harl. 2251, and Tanner, Bibl. Brit. s.v. Lydgate. The greatest part of the viith Book of Gower's Confessio Amantis [see note to l. 820] is taken from this supposed work of Aristotle.' In the Theatrum Chemicum, iii. 14, I find an allusion to the philosopher's stone ending with these words—'Et Aristoteles ad Alexandrum Regem dicit in libro de secretis secretorum, capitulo penultimo: O Alexander, accipe lapidem mineralem, vegetationem, et animalem, et separa elementa.' See Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, sect. 19; iii. 19 (ed. 1871), or ii. 230 (ed. 1840).

1. 1457. Ignotum per ignotius, lit. an unknown thing through a thing more unknown; i.e. an explanation of a hard matter by means of a term that is harder still.

1. 1460. The theory that all things were made of the four elements, earth, air, fire, and water, was the foundation on which all alchemy was built; and it was the obstinacy with which this idea was held that rendered progress in science almost impossible. The words were used in the widest sense; thus air meant any vapour or gas; water, any liquid; earth, any solid sediment; and fire, any amount of heat. Hence also the theory of the four complexions of men. See Gower, Conf. Amant. bk. vii; Theat. Chem. iii. 82; iv. 533, 537.

1. 1461. Rote represents the Lat. radix. A similar use of it occurs in Theat. Chem. ii. 463, where we read that the philosopher's stone 'est radix, de quo omnes sapientes tractauerunt.'

1. 1469. 'Except where it pleases His Deity to inspire mankind, and again, to forbid whomsoever it pleases Him.'

1. 1479. terme of his lyne, during the whole term of his life.

1. 1481. Bote of his bale, a remedy for his evil, help out of his trouble.

NOTES TO THE MANCIPLE'S PROLOGUE (GROUP H).

Line 1. Wite ye, know ye. The singular is I wot, A. S. ic wot, Moeso-Goth. ik wai; the plural is we witen or we wite, A. S. we witon, Moeso-Goth. weis witum. See l. 82, where the right form occurs.

1. 2. Bob-up-and-down. This place is here described as being 'under the Blee,' i.e. under Blean Forest. It is also between Boughton-under-Blean (see Group G, l. 556) and Canterbury. This situation suits very well with Harbledown, and it has generally been supposed that Harbledown is here intended. Harbledown is spelt Harbadown in the account of Queen Isabella's journey to Canterbury (see Furnivall's Temporary Preface, p. 124, l. 18; p. 127, l. 21), and Helbadonne in the account of King John's journey (id. p. 131, l. 1). However, Mr. J. M. Cowper, in a letter to the Athenaum, Dec. 26, 1868, p. 886, says that there still exists a place called Up-and-down Field, in the parish of Thannington, which would suit the position equally well, and he believes it to be the place really meant. If so, the old road must have taken a somewhat different direction from the present one, and there are reasons for supposing that such may have been the case.

The break here between the Canon's Yeoman's and the Manciple's Tales answers to the break between the first and second parts of Lydgate's Storie of Thebes. At the end of Part I, Lydgate mentions the descent down the hill (i.e. Boughton hill), and at the beginning of Part II, he says that the pilgrims had 'passed the thorp of Boughton-on-the-blee.'

1. 5. Dun is in the myre, a proverbial saying originally used in an old rural sport. Dun means a dun horse, or, like Bayard, a horse in general. The game is described in Brand's Popular Antiquities, 4to. ii. 289; and in Gifford's notes to Ben Jonson, vol. vii. p. 283. The latter explanation is quoted by Nares, whom see. Briefly, the game was of this kind. A large log of wood is brought into the midst of a kitchen or large room. The cry is raised that 'Dun is in the mire,' i.e. that the cart-horse is stuck in the mud. Two of the company attempt to drag it along; if they fail, another comes to help, and so on, till Dun is extricated.

There are frequent allusions to it; see Romeo and Juliet, i. 4. 41; Beaumont and Fletcher's Woman-hater, iv. 3; Hudibras, pt. iii. c. iii. l. 110.

In the present passage it means—'we are all at a standstill;' or, 'let us make an effort to move on.' Mr. Hazlitt, in his Proverbial Phrases, quotes a line—'And all gooth bacward, and don is in the myr.'

1. 14. A botel hay, a bottle of hay; similarly, we have a barel ale, Monk's Prol. B. 3083. And see l. 24 below. A bottle of hay was a small bundle of hay, less than a truss, as explained in my note to The Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 2. 45.

1. 16. By the morwe, in the morning. There is no need to explain away the phrase, or to say that it means in the afternoon, as Tyrwhitt does. The Canon's Yeoman's tale is the first told on the third day, and the Manciple's is only the second. The Cook seems to have taken too much to drink over night, and to have had something more before starting. The fresh air has kept him awake for a while at first, but he is now very drowsy indeed.

Tyrwhitt well remarks that there is no allusion here to the unfinished Cook’s Tale in Group A. This seems to shew that the Manciple’s Prologue was written before the Cook’s Tale was begun. See my Preface to the Prioresses Tale, p. xv. Note that the Cook is here excused; l. 29.

l. 23. ‘I know not why, but I would rather go to sleep than have the best gallon of wine in Cheapside.’ Me wer leuer slepe, lit. it would be dearer to me to sleep. Cf. l. 14.

l. 24. Than constitutes the first foot; beste is dissyllabic.

l. 29. As now, for the present; a common phrase.

l. 33. Not wel disposed, indisposed in health.

l. 42. Fan, the fan or vane or board of the quintain. The quintain, as is well known, consisted of a cross-bar turning on a pivot at the top of a post. At one end of the cross-bar was the fan or board, sometimes painted to look like a shield, and at the other was a club or bag of sand. The jouster at the fan had to strike the shield, and at the same time to avoid the stroke given by the swinging bag. The Cook was hardly in a condition for this; his eye and hand were alike unsteady, and his figure did not suggest that he possessed the requisite agility. See Quintain in Nares, and Strutt’s Sports and Pastimes, bk. iii. c. 1; As You Like It, i. 2. 263, on which see Mr. Wright’s note (Clar. Press Series).

l. 44. Wyn ape, ape-wine, or ape’s wine. Tyrwhitt rightly considers this the same as the vin de singe in the Calendrier des Bergers, sign. l. ii. b., where the author speaks of the different effects produced by wine upon different men, according to their temperaments. ‘The Cholerick, he says, a vin de lyon; cest a dire, quant a bien beu, veult tanser, noyser, et battre. The Sanguine a vin de singe; quant a plus beu, tant est plus joyeux. In the same manner, the Phlegmatic is said to have vin de mouton, and the Melancholick vin de porceau.’

Tyrwhitt adds—‘I find the same four animals applied to illustrate the effects of wine in a little Rabbinical tradition, which I shall transcribe here from Fabricius, Cod. Pseudoepig. Veteris Testamenti, vol. i. p. 275. “Vineas plantanti Noacho Satanam se junxisse memorant, qui, dum Noa vites plantaret, maectaverit apud illas ovens, leonem, simiam, et suem: Quod principio potas vini homo sit instar ovis, vinum sumptum efficiat ex homine leonem, largius haustum mutet eum in saltantem simiam, ad ebrietatem infusum transformet illum in pollutam et prostratam suem.” See also Gesta Romanorum, c. 159, where a story of the same purport is quoted from Josephus, in libro de casu rerum naturalium.’

Warton (Hist. E. P. ed. 1871, i. 283) gives a slight sketch of this chapter in the Gesta, referring to Tyrwhitt’s note, and explaining it in the words—'when a man begins to drink, he is meek and ignorant as the lamb, then becomes bold as the lion, his courage is soon transformed into the foolishness of the ape, and at last he wallows in the mire like a sow.'

Barclay, in his Ship of Fools, ed. Jamieson, i. 96, speaking of drunken men, says—

'Some sowe-dronke, swaloyng mete without mesure.'

And again—

'Some are Ape-dronke, full of laughter and of toyes.'

The following interesting explanation by Lacroix is much to the same effect:—

'In Germany and in France it was the custom, at the public entries of kings, princes, and persons of rank, to offer them the wines made in the district, and commonly sold in the town. At Langres, for instance, these wines were put into four pewter vessels called cimaises, which are still to be seen. They were called the lion, monkey, sheep, and pig wines—symbolic names, which expressed the different degrees or phases of drunkenness which they were supposed to be capable of producing: the lion, courage; the monkey, cunning; the sheep, good temper; the pig, bestiality.'—P. Lacroix; Manners, Customs, and Dress during the Middle Ages, 1874, p. 508.

A note in Bell's edition quotes an illustrative passage from a song in Lyly's play of Mother Bombie, printed in the Songs from the Dramatists, ed. Bell, p. 56:—

'O the dear blood of grapes
   Turns us to antic shapes,
   Now to show tricks like ayes,
   Now lion-like to roar;' &c.

The idea here intended is precisely that expressed by Barclay. The Cook, being very dull and ill-humoured, is ironically termed ape-drunk, as if he were 'full of laughter and of toyes,' and ready to play even with a straw. The satire was too much for the Cook, who became excited, and fell from his horse in his attempts to oppose the Manciple.

1. 50. Chiuache, feat of horsemanship, exploit. See Prol. 85 for the serious use of the word, where in chiuachie means on an (equestrian) expedition.

1. 51. 'Alas! he did not stick to his ladle!' He should have been in a kitchen, basting meat, not out of doors, on the back of a horse.

1. 55. Dominacioun, dominion. See note to G. 352 (Prioriese Tale, &c.) Cf. ‘the righteous shall have domination over them in the morning;' Ps. xlix. 14, Prayer-book Version. An early example of the word is in A Balade sent to King Richard, third stanza—'Uertue hath now no dominacioun'—printed at the end of Chaucer's works; ed. 1561, fol. cccxxv, back. See Chaucer's Minor Poems, xiv. 16.
NOTES TO GROUP 1.

1. 62. Fneseth, blows, puffs; of which the reading sneseth is a poor corruption, though occurring in all the modern editions. Dr. Strattmann gives—‘ Fneosen, sternuere; fnese, Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, I. 42.’ This instance is not a very clear one, and perhaps the reading (in Beryn) should really be sneeze. To fnese does not mean to sneeze, but to breathe hard.

I have no doubt that the word neesings in Job xii. 18, meaning not ‘sneezings’ but ‘hard breathings,’ is due to the word fnesynge, by which Wyclif translates the Latin sternuatio. In Jer. viii. 16, Wyclif represents the snorting of horses by fnesting. Cf. A.S. fnast, a puff, a blast, fnastiað, the windpipe; fneosung, a hard breathing. Grimm’s law helps us to a further illustration; for, as the English f is a Greek p, a cognate word is at once seen in the common Greek verb πνεω, I breathe or blow (not I sneeze). For further examples, see fnast, Owl and Nightingale, 44; fnaste, Havelok, 548; fnasted (pt. tense), Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1702; fnast, Alliterative Troybrook, ed. Panton and Donaldson, 168, 878.

1. 72. To reclaim a hawk is to bring it back to the hawkers hand; this was generally effected by holding out a lure, or something tempting to eat. Here the Host means that some day the Cook will hold out a bait to, or lay a snare for, the Manciple, and get him into his power; for example, he might examine the details of the Manciple’s accounts with an inconvenient precision, and perhaps the amounts charged, if tested, would not appear to be strictly honest. The Manciple replies in all good humour, that such a proceeding might certainly bring him into trouble. See Prol. 570-586.

1. 76. Read mauncipl’, and pronounce were a rapidly.
1. 83. ‘Yea, of an excellent vintage.’
1. 90. Pouped, blown; see Nonne Prestes Tale, 578. Here ‘blown upon this horn’ is a jocular phrase for ‘taken a drink out of this gourd.’

NOTES TO THE PARSON’S PROLOGUE (GROUP 1).

Line 1. Maunciple, manciple; see Group H. The connection between this Group and the preceding is, in reality, very slight. The best solution seems to be to suppose that the word maunciple here was merely inserted provisionally. When the Manciple told his tale, it was still morning; see Group H, I. 16, and the note. The Pilgrims had but a very little way to go, however. Perhaps we may suppose that they halted on the road, having a shorter day’s work before them than on the previous days, and then other tales might have been introduced; so that the time wore away till the afternoon came. It is clear, from I. 16, that the Parson’s Tale was intended, when the final revision was made, to be the last on the outward journey. Whatever difficulties exist in the arrangement of the tales may fairly be considered as due to the fact that the final revision was never made.

1. 4. Nyne and twenty. In my Preface to Chaucer's Astrolabie, p. lxiii,
I have explained this passage fully. In that treatise, part ii. sections 41-43, Chaucer explains the method of taking altitudes. He here says that the sun was 29° high, and in II. 6-9 he says that his height was to his shadow in the proportion of 6 to 11. This comes to the same thing, since the angle whose tangent is $\frac{4}{11}$ is very nearly 29°. Chaucer would know this, as I have shewn, by simple inspection of an astrolabe, without calculation.

1. 5. Foure, four p.m. The MSS. have Ten, but the necessity of the correction is undoubted. This was proved by Mr. Brae, in his edition of Chaucer's Astrolabe, pp. 71-74. We have merely to remember that ten p.m. would be after sunset, to see that some alteration must be made. Now the altitude of the sun was 29°, and the day of the year was about April 20 (Pref. to Prioresses Tale, p. xiii); and these data require that the time of day should be about 4 p.m. Tyrwhitt notes that some MSS. actually have the reading Foure, and this gives us authority for the change. Mr. Brae suggests that the reading Ten was very likely a gloss upon Foure; since four o'clock is the tenth hour of the day, reckoning from 6 a.m. The whole matter is thus accounted for.

1. 10. The mones exaltacions, the moon's exaltation. I have discussed this passage in my Preface to Chaucer's Astrolabie, p. lxiii. My explanation is that Chaucer uses exaltation here (as in several other passages) in its ordinary astrological sense. The 'exaltation' of a planet is that sign in which it was believed to exert its greatest influence; and, in accordance with this, the old tables call Taurus the 'exaltation of the Moon,' and Libra the 'exaltation of Saturn.'
These results, founded on no reasons, had to be remembered by sheer effort of memory, if remembered at all. I have no doubt, accordingly, that Chaucer (or his scribes) have made a mistake here, and that the reading should be 'Saturnes,' as proposed by Tyrwhitt. The sentence then means—'Therewith Saturn's exaltation, I mean Libra, kept on continually ascending above the horizon.' This would be quite right, as the sign of Libra was actually ascending at the time supposed. The phrase 'I mene Libra' may be paralleled by the phrase 'I mene Venus;' Kn. Tale, 1358; see also Group B, 1860, 2141. Alwey, continually, is common in Chaucer; see Clerkes Tale,
E. 458, 810. Gan ascende, did ascend, is the opposite to gan descende; Clerkes Tale, E 392. It is somewhat remarkable that the astrologers also divided each sign into three equal parts of ten degrees each, called 'faces;' mentioned in Chaucer's Astrolabie, ii. 4. 38, and in I. 50 of the Squieres Tale. According to their arrangement, the first 10 degrees of Libra was called the 'face of the moon,' or 'mones face.' This suggests that Chaucer may, at the moment, have confused face with exaltation, thus giving us, as the portion of the zodiac intended, the first ten degrees of Libra.

I doubt if the phrase is worth further discussion. For further information see my Preface to Chaucer’s Astrolabie; and, for an ingenious theory, offered in explanation of the whole passage, see Mr. Brae’s edition of the same, p. 74.

1. 16. This means that the Parson’s Tale was meant to be the last one on the outward journey. Unfortunately, there lack a great many more tales than one, as the matter really stands.

1. 26. ‘Unpack your wallet, and let us see what is in it.’ In other words, tell us a story, and let us see what it is like.

1. 32. See 1 Tim. i. 4, iv. 7; 2 Tim. iv. 4.

1. 42. Southren. In my Essay on Alliterative Poetry, printed in vol. iii. of the Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Furnivall, I have shewn that nearly all the alliterative poems are in the Northern or West-Midland dialect, as opposed to the East-Midland dialect of Chaucer, which approaches the Southern dialect. Still, it is the Parson himself, not Chaucer, who says he is a Southerner; and perhaps the poet meant, naturally enough, to tell us that he was a Kentish man. The dialect of Kent was properly Southern. Many Southern forms occur in Gower.

1. 43. Rom, ram, ruf are of course nonsense words, chosen to represent alliteration, because they all alike begin with r. In most alliterative poetry, the number of words in a line beginning with a common letter is, as Chaucer suggests, three.

The word geste here means no more than ‘tell a story,’ without reference to the form of the story. Properly, the gesta were in prose; see note to Group B, 2123. It is, however, worth noting that one very long alliterative poem on the siege of Troy, edited by Panton and Donaldson (Early English Text Society), bears the title of ‘Gest Hystorialie.’ The number of distinctively Northern words in it is very considerable.

I think that this line has been forced by some out of its true meaning, and made to convey a sneer against alliterative poetry which was by no means intended. Neither Chaucer himself nor his amiable parson would have spoken sightingly of other men’s labours. The introduction of the words rom, ram, ruf conveys no more than a perfectly good-humoured allusion. That this is the true view is clear from the very next line, where the Parson declares that ‘he holds rime but little better.’

The most interesting question is—why should Chaucer allude to alliterative poetry at all? The answer is, in my view, that he distinctly wished to recognise the curious work of his contemporary William whose Vision of Piers the Plowman had, by this time, passed, as it were, into a second edition, having been extremely popular in London, and especially amongst the lower classes. The author was not a Southerner, but his poem had come to London, together with himself, before A.D. 1377.

1. 57. Textuel, literally exact in giving the text. The next line means —'I only gather (and give you) the general meaning.' Most quotations at this period were very inexact, and Chaucer himself was no more exact than others.

1. 67. Hadde the wordes. Tyrwhitt says—'This is a French phrase. It is applied to the Speaker of the Commons in Rot. Parl. 51 Edw. III. n. 87. "Mons. Thomas de Hungerford, Chivaler, qi avoit les paroles pur les Communes d'Angleterre en cest Parlement," &c.' It means—was the spokesman.

ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE NINE-SYLLABLE LINE.

In my Preface to the Prioress's Tale, 1st ed. p. lxiii., 2nd ed. p. lxiv., I give some examples of lines in which the first foot consists of a single syllable. In the present volume, we may note similar lines, viz. B. 404, 497. G. 347. As lines of this description are somewhat rare in modern English poetry, I may point out that there are twelve such lines in Tennyson's Vision of Sin, l. 14-25. See further in my Preface to Chaucer's Legend of Good Women.

ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE SECOND NUN'S TALE.

Besides the Legenda Aurea (see p. xxxii), Chaucer also consulted the Lives of Valerian and Tiburtius, in the Acta Sanctorum (April 14). See Dr. Köllbing's paper in the Englische Studien, i. 215; and see the note to l. 369, on p. 176 above. Cf. Cockayne's Shrine, p. 149.
GLOSSARIAL INDEX.

B = Group B.  C = Group C.  G = Group G.  H = Group H.  I = Group I.

The following are the principal contractions used:—

A.S. = Anglo-Saxon (i.e. Old English words in Bosworth’s or Gresn’s Dictionaries).
Dan. = Danish (Ferrall and Repp).
E. = English.
E.E. = Early English (A.D. 1100-1250).
F. = French (Brachet).
G. = German.
Gk. = Greek.
Icel. = Icelandic (Cleasby and Vigfusson).
Ital. = Italian (Meadows).

Also the following: v. = verb in the infinitive mood; pr. s. or pt. s. means the third person singular of the present or past tense, except when I p. or 2 p. (first person or second person) is added; pr. pl. or pt. pl. means, likewise, the third person plural of the present or past tense; imp. s. means the second person singular of the imperative mood. Other contractions, such as s. for substantive, pp. for past participle, will be readily understood. In the references, when the letter is absent before a number, supply the letter last mentioned. The references are to the Group and the line.

‘Gloss. I.’ means the Glossary to Dr. Morris’s edition of the Prologue, Knightes Tale, &c.; ‘Gloss. II.’ means the Glossary to the Prioresses Tale, &c.; both in the Clarendon Press Series.

Ascaunce, adv. perhaps, G 838. Tyrwhitt (note to C. T., l. 7327) refers us to the present passage, to Tro. and Cress., i. 285, 292, and to Lydgate. It clearly means perchance, perhaps. The etymology was discussed, ineffectively, in Notes and Queries, 4 S. xi. 251, 346, 471; xii. 12, 99, 157, 217, 278. The difficulty has arisen from confusion with the modern askance, with which it may have nothing to do. The present word is related rather to O. F. ‘escance, ce qui échoit, tombe en partage’ (Burgny); and to O. F. ‘escas, eschas, à peine, tant soit peu’ (Roquefort). The main part of the word may be our chance, O. F. cheance, Lat. cadentia from cadere, to fall, happen. Cf. Chaucer’s percas, and mod. E. in case, perchance. Our word to escheck is from the same root, and the sb. an escheck appears in Low Latin in many forms, such as escata, escadentia, eschanchia, excidentia, where the prefix is, apparently, the Lat. prep. ex. We find O. F. as = Lat. ad illas, shewing that as-caunce (better as-caunces) stands for ad illas cadentias. The form cance for chance is Picard; see Brachet, Hist. French Grammar, transl. by Kitchin, p. 21. Compare chivalry with cavalry, champagne with campaign, &c. The loss of final s in cances was very easy. Note that the word is trisyllabic.

Aseeencioun, s. ascension, rising up, G 778.

Ascende, v. to ascend, rise (a term in astrology), I 11.

Aseeendent, s. ascendant, B 302. The ‘ascendant’ is that degree of the ecliptic which is rising above the horizon at the time of observing a horoscope, and calculating a nativity.

A-sonder, adv. asunder, apart, B 1157. A. S. on-sundron, separately, from sundor, separate.

Aspye, s. spy, C 755. From O. F. espier, to espie, a word borrowed from O. H. G. spehon, to look at, cognate with Lat. spicere (in conspicere), Skt. sàapk.

Assay, s. trial, G 1249, 1338. F. essai, a trial; from Lat. exagium.

Prees, s. press, throng, B 393, 646, 677. F. presse; from Lat. premere, to press.

Prefectes, s. pl. prefects, G 369. Lat. praefectus.

Preue, v. to prove, i.e. bide the test, G 645; to prove to be right, to succeed when tested, 1212; pp. Preued, tested, 1336. Cf. F. prouver, Lat. probare, to test. But it is not certain that prove is a French word; we find also A. S. prôfian, Icel. prófa, G. prüfen, to prove, try. 'For þeow he bidd to prófianne, he is to be held to be a thief;' Laws of Ine (A. D. 689-728); cap. x.

Preyde, pt. s. prayed, besought, B 391. O. F. priere, Lat. præcari, to pray.

Prolle, pr. pl. 2 p. ye prowl, prowl about, search widely, G 1412. See Prollyn, and Prollynge, in Prompt. Parv. The origin of it is doubtful.

Propre, adj. fine, handsome, C 309. F. propre, proper; Lat. proprius.

Prose, s. prose, I 46. F. prose, Lat. prosa.

Protestacioun, s. protest, I 59.

Prow, s. profit, advantage, C 300, G 609. O. F. prou, prod, gain, advantage; the source appears in Lat. prod-est, it is advantageous.

Prye, v. to pry, look, peer, G 668. Origin unknown. Perhaps it is merely a peculiar use of F. prier, to pray; also, to beseech, beg.

Pryme, s. prime; used in Chaucer, apparently, to signify 9 a.m., C 662. (Gloss. II.)
Pulpet, s. pulpit, C 391. Lat. pulpitum.

Purchasen, ger. to purchase, acquire, G 1405; imp. s. Purchase, may (He) provide, B 873. F. pourchasser, to hunt after, acquire.

Purged, pp. absolved, cleansed (by baptism), G 181. Lat. purgare, to purify.

Purpos, s. purpose, design, B 170. F. propos, Lat. propositum. The verb to purpose is both proposer and purposer in Old French.

Purses, s. pl. purses, G 1404. F. bourse, Gk. Búpóra, a skin.

Purvey, s. equipment, B 247; providence, 483. F. pourvoir, to purvey or provide; Lat. prouidere.

Pye, s. magpie, G 565. F. pie, Lat. pica.

Quell, v. to kill, C 854; imp. s. may (he) kill, G 705. M.E. cullen, Icel. kolla, to hit on the head, to harm, from kollr, head, top, gives E. kill; but quell is the A.S. cuellan.

Queene, s. queen, G 1089; Queene, B 161. A.S. cwén, Gk. γυνή, a woman. It is remarkable that Chaucer makes it a dissyllabic word; see also Gloss. II.

Queynte, adj. pl. strange, G 752. O.F. cointe, instructed, Lat. cognitus, known; but it seems to have been influenced by Lat. comptus, trimmed.

Quik-silver, s. quicksilver, i.e. lively silver, G 822. A.S. cwic, alive.

Quyte, v. to repay (lit. quiet), G 736, 1025; Quiten, 1027; Quyte with⇒to repay⇒, with, 1055; to satisfy, pay in full, B 354; Quyte hir whyle⇒require her time or trouble, lit. repay her time, i.e. her occupation, pains, trouble, B 584; I p. s. pr. I requite, C 420; pp. Quit, freed, G 66, 448. O.F. quiter (F. quitte), Lat. quáter, to quiet, satisfy; from quiétes, rest.

B.

Rad, pp. read, G 211. See Rede.

Rammish, adj. ramlike, strong-scented, G 887. Cf. Icel. ramr, strong, fetid; which is probably closely related to A.S. ramm, a ram.

Rape, v. to snatch up; rape and renne, seize and plunder, G 1422. See the note. The Icel. hrapra means to rush, to hurry; the proper word to use in this phrase would rather have been rive; but there was probably a confusion here with the common Lat. verb rapere. Similarly the Icel. verb raena, to rob, to plunder, has been turned into renne, as if from A.S. rennan, to run. Thus rape and renne (as if from Lat. rapere, and A.S. rennan) has been substituted for the original Icel. hrapra (or rifs or raena). See Renne.

Rather, adv. sooner, earlier (in point of time), B 225, 335, C 643. A.S. hráðe, soon; hráðor, sooner.

Rattes, s. pl. rats, C 854. A.S. rat.

O. F. raver, to run about. Cf. Lat. rabere, to be mad; from which, however, the F. has engager.

Rececheles, adj. careless, indifferent (lit. reckless), B 229. A. S. recceleás; cf. Du. roekeloos.

Receit, s. receipt, i.e. recipe for making a mixture, G 1355, 1366. Receit is from Lat. pp. receptus; recipe is the Lat. imperative singular from the same verb, viz. recipere.

Receyued, pp. accepted (as congenial), acceptable, B 307. F. recevoir, Lat. recipere.

Reclayme, v. to reclaim, as a hawk by a lure, i.e. check, H 72. From Lat. re, back, and clamare, to call.

Recomandeth, pr. s. refl. commends (herself), B 278; ger. Recomende, to commend, commit, G 544. Lat. re, back; con, with; mandare, to hand over.

Rede, adj. as sb. red, i.e. the blood, B 356; as sb. red wine, C 526, 562; pl. Rede, red, G 1095. A. S. ræd, red; Icel. raudr, G. roth. The indef. form is reed, q. v.; rede is def. or plural.

Reed, s. counsel, advice, C 744. A. S. rēd; cf. G. rath.

Reed, adj. red, ruddy, B 452, H 20. See Rede.

Reednesse, s. redness, G 1097, 1100. See above.

Refut, s. place of refuge, refuge, B 546, 852, G 75. Cf. O. F. refui, refuge; Lat. refugium. It is not easy to account for the t; but cf. F. suite, flight, from Lat. pp. fugitus.

Regne, s. kingdom, realm, B 389, 392, 735; pl. Regnes, kingdoms, 181. F. règne, Lat. regnum.

Regneth, pr. s. reigneth, has dominion, B 776. From Lat. regnare.

Reherse, v. to rehearse, recount, G 786. O. F. rehercer, to repeat, lit. to harrow over again; from herce, Lat. acc. herpicem, a harrow (Varro). See Gloss. I.

Rehersaille, s. rehearsal, enumeration, G 852. See above.

Rekeninges, s. pl. reckonings, H 74. A. S. recnan, to reckon.

Rekke, pr. s. 1 p. I reck, care, C 405; imp. s. reck, care, G 698; pr. s. Rekketh, accounts, cares, 632. See Recehe.

Rekne, ger. to reckon, B 158. A. S. recnan, to reckon; G. rechnen.

Relcees, s. relaxation, ceasing; out of relcees, without ceasing, G 46. O. F. reles, relais, relaxation; from the verb relesser (F. relaisser), which is the Lat. relaxare, to relax; from laxus, loose.

Relente, v. to melt, G 1278. From prefix re-, again; and Lat. lentare, to bend; from Lat. lentus, pliant.

Relesse, v. to relieve, relax, B 1069. O. F. relesser (F. relaisser), to relax; Lat. relaxare, to relax; from laxus, lax, loose.

Releuued, pp. relieved, made rich again, G 872. Lat. releuare, to lift up again.

Remenant, s. remnant, remainder, G 1004. From Lat. manere, to remain.

Remeueth, imp. pl. 2 p. remove ye, G 1008. From Lat. mouere, to move.
Renegat, s. renegade, apostate, B 932. Low Lat. renegatus, one who has abjured his faith; from negare, to deny. See below.

Reneye, v. to renounce, abjure, B 376; G 268, 448, 459; 1 p. s. pr. subj. I (may) renounce, 464; pt. pl. I p. we abjured, B 340; pp. Reneyed, 915. Lat. renegare, to adjure, renounce, deny; from negare, to deny. Shakespeare uses the Lat. form renge, King Lear, ii. 2. 84; Ant. and Cleop. i. 1. 8.

Renne, ger. to run, C 796. G 1415; pr. s. Reneth, runs, 905. A.S. rennan, yrnan, to run; Icel. renna, G. rennen.

Reney, v. to ransack, plunder; but only in the phrase rape and renne, seize and plunder, G 1422. See the note. Icel. rana, to plunder; ran, plunder; which appears in E. ransack. The word has been turned into renne, which properly means to run. See above; and see Rape.

Rente, s. rent, toll, B 1142. F. rente, from F. rendre, Lat. reddere, to restore, render.

Repaireth, pr. s. returns, B 967. O. F. repairier = Ital. ripatriare, to return to one’s native country; from Lat. patria, native country.

Replet, adj. full, replete, C 489. Lat. repletus.

Repreuuable, adj. reprehensible, C 632. See below.

Repreu, v. to reproove, H 70; pr. s. Repreueth, I 33. From Lat. reprobare; whence O. F. reprover, to reprove.

Repreue, s. reproof, shame, C 595. See above.

Resalgar, s. realgar, G 814. ‘Realgar, a combination of sulphur and arsenic, of a brilliant red colour as existing in nature; red orpiment;’ Webster. F. réalgar, answering to an O.F. resalgar, Low Lat. risigallum.

Respyt, s. respite, delay (of death), G 543. O. F. respit, (F. répit), Lat. respectus, a respect, regard, looking back. Hence respite and respect are doublets.

Resteleees, adj. restless, C 728. F. reste, rest; rester, to remain, Lat. resteare; from re, and stare, to stand.

Reue, ger. to take away, G 376. A.S. reðsian, to rob; whence E. be-rewe.

Rewe, v. to suffer for, do penance tor, G 997; imp. s. have pity; B 853; pr. s. 2 p. Rewest, hast pity, 854. A.S. hreówian, to grieve; from hreów, grief.

Rewful, adj. sorrowful, sad, B 854. See above.

Rewthe, s. pity, ruth, B 529, 654, 689; as adj. pitiful, 1052. Formed from the verb to rewe (see above); but the A.S. sb. is hreów, grief. Still, the Icel. has hryggð.

Rewtholees, adj. pitiless, B 863.

Reyse, ger. to raise, G 861. Icel. reisa, to raise; the A.S. is réran, whence E. rear.

Ribaudye, s. ribaldry, ribald jesting, C 324. O. F. ribald, Low Lat. ribaldus, a ribald, a worthless fellow.

Riden, pt. pl. rode, C 968. See Rydinge.

Rit, pr. s. rides (contr. from rideth), G 608, H 79.

Roialtee, s. royalty, B 418. From F. roi, Lat. rex; Skt. rājā, a king.

Roialler, adj. comp. royaller, more royal, B 402.

Rolleth, pr. s. rolls, turns over, C 838. O. F. rol er (F. rouler);
Lat. rotulare, to turn round; from rota, a wheel.

Rom., ram, ruf; nonsense words, to imitate alliteration (see note), I 43.

Rumbled, pt. s. rummaged, fumbled, G 1322. Cf. Du. rommeld, to rumble, buzz; also, to mix up, disarrange; Dan. rumle, to rumble, to roll. See Gloss. II.

Romen, v. to roam, B 558. Cf. O.F. romieu, romien, romier, Ital. romeo (Dante), a pilgrim to Rome. Hence romen = to go to Rome; the connection with E. roam is doubtful.

Rose-reed, adj. red as a rose, G 254. (Trisyllabic.)

Rote, in phr. by rote, i.e. by heart, C 332. O.F. rote, F. route; allied to F. routine, O.F. rotine. Par rotine, by rote; Cotgrave. See Route.

Route, s. troop, throng, company, B 387, 659, 776. F. route, from Lat. rupta, a broken (band); from rumpere, to break. Cf. G. rote, a troop; O. Flemish rote.

Route, v. to assemble in a company, B 540. See above.

Rownen, v. to whisper, G 894. A.S. rūnian, to whisper; from rūn, a rune, a magic character, a mystery; O. Flemish ruunen, to whisper. Hence round, to whisper, in Shakespeare.

Rubifying, s. rubefaction, reddening, G 797.

Ryghtwisnesse, s. righteousness, C 637. A.S. rīhtwīs, righteous; Icel. rétviss. Righteous is a corrupt spelling of rightwise.

Ryme, v. to rime, to speak in verse, G 1093. See above.

Ryotoures, s. pl. rioters, roysterers, C 661. Roquefort gives rioter to dispute; riote, noise, combat; fāre rīote, to grumble, dispute; rios, a dispute, debate. The suggested connection with Du. ravotten, to romp, is unlikely.

S.

Sadel, s. saddle, H 52. A.S. sadel.

Sadly, adv. in a settled manner, i.e. deeply, unstintingly, B 743. See Sad.
INDEX.

Glossarial Index.

Saffron with, to tinge with saffron, to colour, C 345. F. safran; from the Arab. za'farın, safron.

Sal armioniak, s. sal ammoniac, G 798, 824. Lat. sal ammoniacum, Armenian salt. 'Sal ammoniac, chloride of ammonium, a salt of a sharp, acrid taste; ... also called hydrochlorate, or muriate of ammonia'; Webster. The word armioniak certainly answers to the Lat. Armeniacum in the old treatises. Nevertheless the right spelling is, perhaps, ammoniac; 'ἀμμονιακόν, ῶ saal ammoniac, rock-salt, Dioscorides'; Liddell and Scott.

Sal peter, s. saltpetre, G 808. Lat. sal petrae, rock-salt; 'so called because it exudes from rocks or walls; nitrate of potassa; —called also nitre'; Webster.

Sal preparat, s. prepared salt, G 810. See the note.

Sal tartræ, s. salt of tartar, G 810. 'Salt of tartar, carbonate of potash; ... at first prepared from cream of tartar'; Webster.
